Luke 21:34-36—“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take you stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Peled Arbeli titled “A Cold Revenge: How Iran Baited Israel on October 7” was posted at jpost.com on June 27, 2024. Following are excerpts of the article.

Maariv [a Hebrew-language daily newspaper] held an in-depth conversation with Professor Boaz Ganor, Reichman University President and Founder of the International Institute for Counter-Terrorism. We discussed today’s pressing issues, Iran’s role in the Israel-Hamas War, and developments in the Middle East.

Regarding the initiative for the war, Professor Ganor has a different opinion than many of his friends in the fields of security and academia. He claimed: “The [Israel-Hamas War] was planned, prepared, financed and initiated by Iran.”

His explanation was based on three reasons.

- The first reason was revenge – for various reasons like scientist killed, damage to facilities and cyber attacks.
- The second reason was strategic timing – to draw attention away from Iran being one step away obtaining a military nuclear capability.
- The third reason was the fear of normalization between Israel and Saudi Arabia.

Professor Ganor explained in detail that the Iranians anticipated Israel’s response: “Just as we responded. WE did not surprise them with any move. They expected us to respond in exactly this way (the Air Force, entering Gaza) and hoped that it would degenerate into a long war of attrition.”

According to Ganor, Israel should have taken a different approach: “What should have been done was not to deal with the tactical threat to the State of Israel (Hamas), but the strategic threat (Hezbollah).”

Professor Ganor compared the situation to a street war: “Think of a situation where you are walking down the street and a criminal gang attacks you. If you attack the thug, you will not deter the gang’s leader or the powerful [actors]. On the other hand, if you attack [one of] the powerful [actors], you may deter the others. Israel has decided that it is taking care of the one who slapped it in the face and not taking care of the bigger thugs in the region.”

An article by David Harsanyi titled “Why the Left Hates It When You Point Out We Are ‘A Republic, Not A Democracy’ ” was posted at townhall.com on June 21, 2024. Following is the article.

For as long as I can remember, the Left has been sneering at anyone who points out that the United States is a republic, not a democracy.

They find the notion almost as unsophisticated and fascistic as flying a revolutionary-era flag. Other dismiss the democracy/republic debate as pedantic or a semantic distraction. They shouldn't.

The other day, CNN's Donie O'Sullivan tried to make Trump fans who repeat this factual contention look like a bunch of dumb, lock stepping authoritarians. To explain the problem, CNN even recruited "democracy" expert Anne Applebaum, who noted: "America is a democracy. It was founded as a democracy . . . The word 'democracy' and the 'republic' have often been used interchangeably. There isn't a meaningful difference between them."

Sure there is.

Ask the contemporary leftists who targeted virtually every protection we have against mob rule in the name of "democracy" – attacking the Supreme Court, the Electoral College, federalism, the filibuster, the Senate, and even the existence of states. They understand the difference, if just intuitively.

Ask the leftists who treat the "popular vote" – not as a wish casting cope, but as a means of legitimizing presidential elections. Those who want a few big states ruling the nation via a direct federal democracy are not interested in a "republic" that derives power from the governed, but one that strips local control and individual right from those they dislike.

Blunting the federal government's power over states and the state's power over individuals is an indispensable way to ensure a diverse people in a huge nation can govern themselves and live freely. The "save democracy" types who refer to these long-standing federalist institutions as "minority rule" do not view "democracy" and a constitutional republic as interchangeable concepts.

Neither do smaller blue-state governors who sign a national vote compact that not only dilutes their state's power, but circumvents the Constitution. They love a direct democracy. A constitutional republic? Not so much.

When writers at The Atlantic (where Applebaum is a contributor) talk about "The Democrats' Last Chance to Save Democracy," they aren't lamenting Bidens' unprecedented executive abuse but the "democratic deficits in the Senate and the Electoral College" – as is these institutions weren't specifically instituted to diffuse centralized control. They know the difference.

Democrats who want to "expand" the Supreme Court for failing to follow democratic trends don't care about the "republic." After all, many of the high court's most historic decisions (including Dred Scott and Plessy) cut the legs from under "democracy."

Or take the so-called moderate Democrats who want to get rid of the filibuster or use the slimmest of fleeting majorities to shove through massive, generational federal “reforms” [Obamacare or The Deficit Reduction Act] without any national consensus. They are aware that “reforms” will overturn hundreds of state and local laws. They want local minorities subordinate to the whims and vagaries of national majorities.

Then again, the more “democracy” we have, the more demagoguery thrives. Of course, they are fans.

As it turns out, according to CNN a number of Trump supporters also understand the distinction even if they are unable to articulate it in poli-scientific terms. Then again, if O’Sullivan wants to dunk on them, maybe he should take a civics refresher himself.

“There is, of course, a legitimate debate to be had on what form of democracy we have here in the United States – direct democracy, representative democracy, in fact, constitutional republic, which you heard people mentioned in that piece, that is a form of democracy,” he explained.

There is, “of course,” zero “legitimate debate discussion” to be had over whether we are a “direct democracy.” Not today, nor ever.

- “Democracy” isn’t even mentioned anywhere in any founding document – much less a direct one.
- None of the framers entertained any notions about majoritarianism or federal power that would even loosely comport the ones now embraced by the Left.

People will often tell me that, sure, we might be a republic, but we also have “democratic institutions.” Of course, we do. We also have numerous non-democratic institutions.

The Bill of Rights, for instance, is largely concerned with protecting individuals from the state and the mob. The insistence that we only use “democracy” is meant to corrode the importance and acceptance of those counter-majoritarian rules and traditions.

“For centuries,” insists O’Sullivan, “America has celebrated its democracy,” before playing clips of Ronald Reagan and others praising the notion of “democracy.”

Indeed, the word “democracy” – from “demos,” the people – has been used as a shorthand for self-rule since before Pericles. In the past, we’ve used it to convey respect for a set of liberal ideas about liberties and rights, as well as self-determination. I’m sure I’ve used it in that way, too. No doubt, most Americans also comprehend the notion of “democracy” in the same, vague context.

These days, though, a bunch of illiberal progressives (and others) have taken universal notions that once fell under the umbrella of “democracy” and cynically distorted them to champion a hyper-majoritarian outlook. It’s no accident the people who demand you call us a “democracy” also champion the idea that 50.1% of the country should be empowered to lord over the economic, religious, cultural, and political decisions of 49.9%.

It's the point.

An article by Star Parker titled “Tim Scott’s Important Message” was posted at townhall.com on June 26, 2024. Following is the article.

South Carolina Republican Senator Tim Scott hosted an event in Washington D.C., marking the Juneteenth holiday – which showcased why he has been included among the candidates Donald Trump is considering as his running mate.

Juneteenth (now a national holiday) commemorates June 19, 1865, the date of the final implementation of the Emancipation Proclamation in the State of Texas. It's considered the official end of slavery in the United States.

Scott's event (attended by a list of major Republican donors, which I also had the privilege of attending) was entitled the Great Opportunity Policy Summit.

This following the announcement of Scott's Great Opportunity PAC of plans to spend $14 million on outreach to Black and Hispanic Americans leading up to the presidential election.

The centerpiece of Scott's message about American opportunity has always been himself. His birth into a poor home in the South to a single mother. That is, birth into exactly the circumstances which so many claim define circumstances that make it impossible to succeed.

Black, poor, no father. In a country that is allegedly racist.

But Scott's critical message is that America is not about racism, but is about opportunity.

Does that mean there are no racists in America? Of course, not. But there are sinners of all shapes and forms in our country.

Scott is telling Black Americans, and all Americans, that you are not defined by others. Others do not define your personal destiny. You do.

And he presents himself to show that being Black (let alone being born Black and poor to a single mother) is not a recipe for failure. Despite coming into this world under tough circumstances, he now is a United States senator and has been a candidate for the nation's highest office.

It is also important to note that Scott is a humble man. He does not say he made it because he is so special. What he says is special is our country and the values that allow even an ordinary guy under the worst of circumstances to succeed.

The essence of Scott’s message was once conveyed by Irish playwright George Bernard Shaw, which subsequently was used by President John F. Kennedy in an address to the Irish parliament and then by Robert F. Kennedy in his presidential campaign in 1968.

“You see things as they are and ask, ‘why?’ I dream things that never were and ask, ‘Why not?’” A more prosaic version says some see a glass half full and some see a glass half empty. Of course, it is the nature of things that work always must be done to make things better.

So, despite that truth that America is a free country, and that anyone with character, determination and the right values can make it, things can always be improved.

So, Scott’s Opportunity Policy program targets institutional improvements that can be made in the country to make the path to success even smoother and more accessible.

- He is an advocate of giving parents choice and control over where to send their child to school.
- And he supports the Opportunity Zone program, which provides tax incentives for business investment in our nation’s most troubled ZIP codes.
- There is no freedom without law, so Scott supports rigorous law enforcement both in our cities and on our border.
- Black Americans are making it in America – 22% of Blacks earn over $100,000 a year, and 33% earn over $75,000.
- Scott’s vitally important message to all Americans (of every background) is this is a land of opportunity.
- Taking advantage of it means taking responsibility for your life.
- The more individuals take control of their personal destiny, the less they believe that others control their lives, the greater our country will become.
