But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take you stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Susan Campbell titled “ ‘I’ve Got Your Daughter’: Scottsdale [Arizona] Mom Warns of Close Call With AI Voice Cloning Scam” was posted at azfamily.com on April 10, 2023. Following is the article.

The phone number that appeared on the screen was unfamiliar. Jennifer DeStefano almost let it go to voicemail, but her 15-year-old was out of town skiing. Maybe there had been an accident.

“I picked up the phone, and I hear my daughter’s voice, and it says, ‘Mom!’ and she’s sobbing,” DeStefano recalled. “I said, ‘What happened?’ And she said, ‘Mom, I messed up,’ and she’s sobbing and crying.”

In a split second, DeStefano’s confusion turned to terror.

“Then I hear a man’s voice say, ‘Put your head back. Lie down,’ and I’m like, ‘Wait, what is going on?’” DeStefano said. “This man gets on the phone, and he’s like, ‘Listen here. I’ve got your daughter. This is how it’s going to go down. You call the police, you call anybody, I’m going to pop her so full of drugs. I’m going to have my way with her, and I’m going to drop her off in Mexico.’ And at the moment, I just started shaking. In the background, she’s going, ‘Help me, Mom. Please help me. Help me,’ and bawling.”

There was no doubt in DeStefano’s mind. Her daughter was in trouble.

“It was never a question of who is this? It was completely her voice. It was her inflection. It was the way she would have cried,” she said. “I never doubted for one second it was her. That’s the freaky part that really got mot to my core.”

But the 15-year-old never said any of it. The voice on the phone was just a clone created by artificial intelligence.

“You can no longer trust your ears,” said Subbarao Kambhampati, a computer science professor at Arizona State University specializing in AI. He says voice cloning technology is rapidly improving.

“In the beginning, it would require a larger amount of samples. Now there are ways in which you can do this with just three seconds of your voice. Three seconds. And with the three seconds, it can come close to how exactly you sound.”

“Most of the voice cloning actually captures the inflection as well as the emotion. The larger the sample, the better off you are in capturing those,” Kambhampati said. “Obviously, if you spoke in your normal voice, I wouldn’t necessarily be able to clone how you might sound when you’re upset, but if I also had three seconds of your upset voice, then all bets are off.”

Deep learning technology currently has very little oversight, and according to Kambhampati, it is becoming easier to access and use.

“It’s a new toy, and I think there could be good uses, but certainly, there can be pretty worrisome uses, too,” he said.

Dan Mayo, the assistant special agent in charge of the FBI’s Phoenix office, says scammers who use voice cloning technology often find their prey on social media.

“You’ve got to keep that stuff locked down. The problem is, if you have it public, you’re allowing yourself to be scammed by people like this because they’re going to be looking for public profiles that have as much information as possible on you, and when they get a hold of that, they’re going to dig into you.”

According to the Federal Trade Commission, scammers will often ask victims to wire money, send cryptocurrency or pay the ransom with gift cards. Once the money or gift card numbers are transferred, getting them back is almost impossible.

“Just think of the movies. Slow it down. Slow the person down. Ask a bunch of questions,” Mayo said. “If they have someone of interest to you, you’re going to know a lot of details about them that this scam artist isn’t going to know. You start asking questions about who it is and different details of their background that are not publicly available, you’re going to find out real quick that it’s a scam artist.”

There are other red flags, according to Mayo.

- “If the phone number is coming from an area code that you’re not familiar with, that should be one red flag.”
- “Second red flag – international numbers.”
- Third red flag – they will not allow you to get off the phone and talk to your significant other. That’s a problem.”

The person who had supposedly kidnapped DeStefano’s daughter demanded money. He started at a million dollars.

“I’m like, ‘I don’t have a million dollars,’” she said. “Just don’t hurt my daughter. Then he wanted $50,000.”

DeStefano kept him talking. She was at her other daughter’s dance studio, surrounded by worried moms who wanted to help. One called 911. Another called DeStefano’s husband. Within just four minutes, they confirmed her daughter was safe.

“She was upstairs in her room going, ‘What? What’s going on?’ ” DeStefano said. “Then I got angry, obviously, with these guys. This is not something you play around with.”

It is unknown how many people have received similar scam calls about a family emergency or fake kidnapping using a clone voice.

“It happens on a daily basis, some of which are reported, some of which are not,” Mayo said. “I think a lot of people are kind of decompressing when they realize that it was a fake scam and probably just happy that it didn’t happen to them. However, there are some people who give in to these, and they end up sending the money to these individuals. Trust me, the FBI is looking into these people, and we find them.”

DeStefano hung up the phone. That’s when the wave of relief washed over her.

“I literally just sat down and broke down crying,” she said.

They were tears for all of the what-ifs. It all just seemed so real.

An article by Joann Muller and Jael Holzman titled “Why the U.S. Can’t Build EVs Without China” was posted at axios.com on April 12, 2023. Following are excerpts of the article.

The Biden administration’s effort to spur domestic battery manufacturing is running into a problem. Some critical raw materials are only found abroad, and China controls much of the supply.

Why it matters

The provenance of raw materials used in electric vehicle (EV) production (including lithium, nickel, cobalt and graphite) is about to have a huge impact on tax credits designed to put such cars within reach of average Americans.

Details

Consumers can earn up to $7,500 in federal tax credits on EV purchases – but only when buying cars that meet certain sourcing requirements.

- New rules issued under last year’s Inflation Reduction Act exclude EVs with components from ‘foreign entities of concern’ – a category that remains hazy but will likely include China, given that federal officials recently tagged it as such in the semiconductor world.
- The idea is to reduce U.S. reliance on China, a lofty goal given that country’s control of vital battery resources and technology.

Reality check

Many of the minerals essential to EV battery chemistries are primarily mined and processed in China, or by companies within China’s sphere of influence.

- China is poised to control a third of the world’s lithium supply by 2025, for example.

- It's also home to one of the world's largest natural battery graphite resources, and is the only country currently mining such material in large quantities.

The intrigue

Navigating such geopolitics while trying to master rapidly evolving technology can be dicey for automakers, who are lining up for lucrative tax credits of their own to produce batteries in the U.S.

Zoom in

Ford Motor, for example, expects more than $7 billion in battery manufacturing tax credits between now and 2026, and says the annual credits will leap much higher starting in 2027.

- Yet the carmaker has been criticized for collaborating with a Chinese supplier on a new $3.5 billion battery plant in Michigan, and for investing alongside a Chinese mining company in an Indonesian nickel plant.
- Senator Marco Rubio (R-Fla.) is sponsoring a bill aimed at Ford that would outlaw tax credits for joint ventures with Chinese companies, or for EVs built using battery technology licensed from China.

What they are saying

“Hardworking Americans should not be forced to subsidize Chinese companies that make batteries for electric vehicles that cost more than most people make in a year,” Rubio said in a statement.

The big picture

Auto industry executives say there's danger in trying to unwind global supply chains to protect regional economies.

- Battery technology is still evolving (sodium-based designs are one intriguing development) – meaning the U.S. may be at risk of building mines and factories to produce batteries that wind up being obsolete in a decade. (Cobalt and nickel, for instance, are prevalent in today's batteries but could soon be outmoded.)

The bottom line

The White House has notched several big battery wins, but it'll take more than a few tax breaks to reverse decades of globalization.

An article by John Stossel titled “Save the Planet, Invest in Fossil Fuels” was posted at townhall.com on April 19, 2023. Following is the article.

Earth Day is Saturday! Hooray?

“Saving humanity from the climate crisis,” says EarthDay.org, requires us to “push away from the dirty fossil fuel economy.”

Sounds logical.

But my latest video explains why doing that is cruel to poor people.

“Three billion people in the world still use less electricity than a typical refrigerator,” explains Alex Epstein, author of “The Moral Case for Fossil Fuels.” If they’re going to have “their first well-paying jobs . . . their first consistent supply of clean water . . . a modern life . . . that’s going to depend on fossil fuels.”

But the greens say we have a better replacement: wind and solar power.

So I push back at Epstein: “Solar is getting cheaper all the time. It’s already cheaper than fossil fuels.”

“When we look at solar and wind around the world,” he answers, “it always correlates to rising prices and declining reliability. Why? Because solar and wind are intermittent. At any time, they can go near zero.”

That means wind turbines and solar farms don’t replace fossil fuel plants. You have to build them in addition to fossil fuel plants.

“We spent trillions of dollars in subsidies and mandates putting solar panels and wind turbines everywhere,” Epstein points out. “Yet we’re still having shortages of fossil fuels.”

Germany invested heavily in solar and wind power. Elites around the world praised German politicians for creating record renewable power. But that didn’t work so well when the winds slowed and clouds appeared.

Germans now pay much more for electricity, triple what Americans pay.

Germany has even turned to coal for energy. Coal! Coal is the filthiest fuel. Yet Germany now imports coal from Russia and America.

Okay, say the activists, even if renewables have problems, soon we’ll have better batteries so we can bank wind and solar energy and store it until it's needed!

Batteries are "getting continually better and cheaper," I say to Epstein.

Backing up all solar and wind with batteries would cost "multiples of global GDP," responds Epstein. "This is a total fantasy."

"You say unaffordable," I push back, "but who's to determine what that is?"

"The general narrative is we're destroying the planet with fossil fuels, so who cares how much energy costs?" Epstein says. "The truth is, the planet is only livable because of low-cost, reliable energy from fossil fuels."

Before fossil fuels, "Life expectancy was below 30. Income was basically nonexistent. The population was stagnant because people had such a high death rate. The basic reason is that nature is not a very livable place for human beings."

By contrast, thanks to cheap fossil fuels, "We make it unnaturally safe by producing all forms of climate protection. We produce drought relief . . . sturdy buildings. We produce heat when it's cold, we produce cold when it's hot. We have this amazing, productive ability. That's the only reason we experience the planet as livable."

Unfortunately, because of today's foolish hysteria over fossil fuels, energy prices will climb. "When you threaten an industry, you scare investors and producers. Massive threats to industry have definitely cut down production."

America's affluent protesters can afford the higher prices. But poor people will suffer. Allowing billions of the world's poor to live a modern life requires energy from gas, oil and even coal.

The United Nations now puts pressure on countries to stop using fossil fuels. Governments in poor countries, eager for UN handouts, often listen.

"Their whole population is going to suffer," warns Epstein. "People who have by far the least in the world (are) most subject to today's international pressure against fossil fuels."

If we want more of the poorest people to have decent lives, we need to invest in both fossil fuels and nuclear power.

An article by Dennis Prager titled "Slavery, the Left, and Truth" was posted at townhall.com on April 18, 2023. Following is the article.

A generation of Americans is being raised on half-truths and lies about the history of slavery in America. They are given the impression that America was uniquely bad and that American slavery was uniquely bad. They learn nothing about slavery elsewhere. Among the many lies they are told are that “black slaves built America” and that America is systemically racist.

Since the mortal enemy of the Left is truth, here are some truths about slavery.

America’s slavery compared to slavery elsewhere

If you are interested in morality and committed to truth, you do not ask, “Who had slaves?” You ask, “Who ended slavery?”

- Who had slaves?

Every civilization throughout history had slaves: Asian societies, Africans, Native Americans and other Indigenous peoples around the world, and the Muslim/Arab world, which may have the most slaves of all.

- Who ended slavery?

There was only one thing unique about slavery in the West: It raised the issue of the morality of slavery, ferociously debated it and finally abolished it there, before it was abolished in any other civilization.

If you care about moral truth rather than, for example, promoting America-hatred, you must recognize – and you must teach – that America was one of the first slave-holding societies to abolish slavery.

This even includes Africa. Cornell professor Sandra Greene, a black scholar of African history, notes, “Slavery in the United States ended in 1865, but in West Africa it was not legally ended until 1875, and then it stretched on unofficially until almost World War I.”

- The number of slaves

According to the authoritative SlaveVoyages.org, the total number of black slaves imported from Africa into America was 305,326.

The number of black slaves other countries imported from Africa into the rest of the New World (into the Caribbean and South America) was 12,521,337.

In other words, other countries imported 41 times the number of black slaves into the Western Hemisphere than the United States did (including the years before American independence).

Yet, the American Left never mentions this important moral point – because the Left-controlled education system suppresses facts it finds inconvenient, and the Left is not interested in morality or truth, but in vilifying America.

And then there is Arab/Muslim enslavement of blacks. Professor Paul Lovejoy, in his “Transformations in Slavery: A History of Slavery in Africa” (Cambridge University Press, 2012), reveals that from the beginning of Islam in the 7th century through the year 1600, the estimated number of Africans enslaved by Muslims was about 7 million. After 1600, it was about a million per year.

Do American students ever learn about Arab/Muslim slave trade?

How many know, for example, that a great percentage of the African male slaves were castrated so that they could not have families?

“Black slaves built America”

Those who make this argument point to the lucrative cotton manufacturing and trade in the 19th-century – the industry in which black slaves were primarily used in the American South.

But University of Illinois professor of Economics, Deirdre McCloskey, answered this: “Growing cotton, unlike sugar or rice, never required slavery. By 1870, freedmen and whites produced as much cotton as the South produced in the slave time of 1860. Cotton was not a slave crop in India or in southwest China, where it was grown in bulk . . . That slaves produced cotton does not imply that they were essential or causal in the production . . . The United States and the United Kingdom and the rest would have become just as rich without the 250 years of unrequited toil. They have remained rich, observe, even after the peculiar institution was abolished, because their riches did not depend on its sinfulness.”

But one need not know anything about cotton to understand how false “Black slaves built America” is. All you need is common sense.

- First, even if slavery accounted for much of the wealth of the South, the Civil War that brought slavery to an end in the United States wiped out nearly all that wealth and cost the Union billions (in today’s dollars).
- Second, if slavery built the American economy, the most robust economy in world history, why didn’t Brazil become an economic superpower?

Brazil imported four million black slaves, about 12 times as many as America.

Why did the slave-owning American South lag so far behind the North economically?

Why did England (which, though it played a major role in the transatlantic slave trade until the beginning of the 19th century, but had almost no slaves) become the most advanced economy of the 19th century?

“Black slaves built America” is left-wing propaganda to vilify America and to discredit capitalism.

“America is systemically racist”

Four million black people have emigrated to the United States since the 1960s – and tens of millions more would if they could.

Are they all fools?

Why would anyone move to a country that is systemically bigoted against them?

Did any Jews emigrate to Germany in the 1930s?

Blacks have emigrated to the United States because they know what Ayaan Hirsi Ali, the black woman who fled her homeland of Somalia and now writes and lectures in America, knows: “What the media do not tell you is that America is the best place on the planet to be black, female, gay, trans or what have you.”

Blacks emigrating to America know what Algerian writer Kamel Daoud, writing in Le Monde and Le Point knows: “It is forbidden to say that the West is also the place to which we flee when we want to escape the injustice of our country of origin, dictatorship, war, hunger, or simply boredom. It is fashionable to say that the West is guilty of everything.”

As regards American slavery and everything else, always remember this: Truth is a liberal value, and truth is a conservative value. It is not a left-wing value.”

Isaiah 55:6-11–“Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
