Luke 21:34-36—“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take your stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Terence P. Jeffrey titled "Will Roberts and Kavanaugh Stand With the Unborn or the Unjust?" was posted at cnsnews.com on May 19, 2021. Following is the article.

Chief Justice John Roberts and Justice Brett Kavanaugh, both nominated by Republican presidents, have both written absurd opinions on abortion laws.

The case of Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health, which the Supreme Court will hear this year, could give them an opportunity to redeem themselves.

At issue in this case is a Mississippi law that bans most abortions after a baby's 15th gestational week. The question: Can a state prohibit doctors from killing unborn babies who are not yet old enough to survive outside the womb?

In the 2016 case of Whole Woman's Health v. Hellerstedt, Chief Justice John Roberts joined the minority of justices who opposed the court's decision to knock down less consequential abortion regulations that Texas had enacted. These regulations said that doctors performing abortions must "have active admitting privileges at a hospital" within 30 miles of the facility where they terminated babies and that any such facility must meet the state's "minimum standards . . . for ambulatory surgical centers."

With Justice Antonin Scalia having passed away earlier that year, a then-eight-member court ruled 5 to 3 against this Texas law. Justice Stephen Breyer wrote the majority opinion, joined by Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor, Elena Kagan and Anthony Kennedy (for whom future Justice Brett Kavanaugh had once clerked). Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito both wrote dissents. Roberts and Thomas joined Alito's dissent.

In his majority opinion in Whole Woman's Health, Breyer argued that the Texas regulations violated the "undue burden" test the Supreme Court had laid down in Planned Parenthood v. Casey. "An undue burden exists, and therefore a provision of law is invalid, if its purpose or effect is to place a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abortion before the fetus attains viability," the court had said in that 1992 opinion co-authored by Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony Kennedy and David Souter.

In the 2016 case, Breyer, citing Planned Parenthood v. Casey, said of the two Texas abortion regulations: "Each places a substantial obstacle in the path of women seeking a previability abortion, each constitutes an undue burden on abortion access . . . and each violates the Federal Constitution."

In 2020, the court took up the case of June Medical Services v. Russo. It challenged a Louisiana abortion law that—mirroring the Texas law the court had knocked down in 2016—required abortionists to have admitting privileges at a hospital within 30 miles of where they performed abortions.

But the Supreme Court of 2020 was not the Supreme Court of 2016.

Were there now enough votes to let the Louisiana law stand?

No. Why? Because, as this column has noted before, Roberts switched sides.

The court ruled 5 to 4 against the Louisiana regulation—as Roberts concurred with Ginsburg, Breyer, Sotomayor and Kagan in opposing it.

Roberts explained that in the four short years between 2016 and 2020, he had flipped on the issue because of his dedication to upholding Supreme Court precedents—even when he believed they were wrong.

“I joined the dissent in Whole Woman’s Health and continue to believe that the case was wrongly decided,” Roberts wrote in a concurring opinion in June Medical Services. “The question today however is not whether Whole Woman’s Health was right or wrong, but whether to adhere to it in deciding the present case.”

“The legal doctrine of stare decisis requires us, absent special circumstances, to treat like cases alike,” said Roberts. “The Louisiana law imposes a burden on access to abortion just as severe as that imposed by the Texas law, for the same reasons. Therefore Louisiana’s law cannot stand under our precedents.”

Before Trump nominated Kavanaugh to the Supreme Court, Kavanaugh had served on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia when it heard the case of Garza v. Hargan. Here the question was whether a pregnant teenage alien caught trying to illegally enter this country has a right to an abortion in the United States.

Judge Karen Henderson, as this column had noted before, was critical of the Trump administration’s approach to this untested proposition.

“Does an alien minor who attempts to enter the United States eight weeks pregnant—and who is immediately apprehended and then in custody for 36 days between arriving and filing a federal suit—have a constitutional right to an elective abortion?” wrote Henderson. “The government has inexplicably and wrongheadedly failed to take a position on that antecedent question. I say wrongheadedly because at least to me the answer is plainly—and easily—no.”

Kavanaugh, however, was more understanding.

He conceded that the Supreme Court had not ruled on a similar case before. “To be sure,” he said, “this case presents a new situation not yet directly confronted by the Supreme Court.”

But he also conceded that under his reading of the precedents, an alien teen did have a right to an abortion here. “In sum,” he said. “under the Government’s arguments in this case and the Supreme Court’s precedents, the unlawful immigrant minor is assumed to have a right under precedent to an abortion.”

Now Mississippi has said you cannot kill an unborn child after 15 weeks of gestation. Will Roberts and Kavanaugh say they have to stand by the wrongly decided Roe v. Wade and Planned Parenthood v. Casey—because they are precedents?

Or will they stand on principle—and the Constitution itself—and let Mississippi and other states protect the right to life of the innocent unborn?

An article by black author Delano Squires titled “Why Christianity and Critical Race Theory Cannot Coexist” was posted at thefederalist.com on May 13, 2021. Following is the article.

Critical race theory is the most discussed and debated academic theory in America today. Its advocates believe it is a tool for understanding the pervasiveness of systemic racism ever since the country was founded. Its detractors have called it a Marxist framework that causes racism and teaches people to judge each other based on skin color.

One institution that has been particularly damaged by the spread of critical race theory is American evangelicalism. A recent book entitled “Fault Lines,” by Dr. Voddie Baucham Jr., pastor and dean at the African Christian University, directly addresses the social justice movement and how it threatens the unity of Christian believers.

The term “evangelical” is often used in the context of politics to describe white churchgoers who hold conservative beliefs and vote Republican. I use it here to refer to Protestant Christian churches, pastors, laypeople, and organizations who believe in the authority, infallibility, inerrancy, and sufficiency of the Bible. These include people of all colors and ethnic backgrounds who believe that Jesus’s resurrection was an actual historical event, not just a metaphor for living a better life or an outdated dogmatic claim.

This distinction is important because many people who profess to be Christians take a completely different view of the Bible. To them, Jesus was a revolutionary who came to upend unjust systems of oppression. They see the embrace of critical race theory as a positive step in the quest for racial justice and reconciliation in America.

Competing Worldviews Built on Different Foundations

“Fault Lines” explains the ascendancy of critical social justice in every aspect of American politics and culture. Baucham defines critical social justice as the view that the world is divided between oppressor (e.g., white, male, heterosexual, cis-gender) and oppressed (e.g., black, female, homosexual, transgender) groups.

This understanding of society lies at the heart of cultural and political debates about racism, sexism, homophobia, transphobia, xenophobia, and Islamophobia. It also informs the language of antiracism, intersectionality, and white privilege that is now ubiquitous in American life.

A critical social justice worldview is not simply a set of beliefs. It is a way of viewing the world that is built on assumptions about, among other things, humanity, authority, evil, and justice. The theories Baucham presents in “Fault Lines” can be thought of as a stone wall that is supported by an arch.

Critical social justice is the keystone theory that holds the arch together and critical race theory is the capstone that sits on top of the wall.

The wall itself is built on four cornerstones: Karl Marx's conflict theory, Antonio Gramsci's theory of cultural hegemony, the Frankfurt School's critical theory, and Derrick Bell's critical legal studies. These theories, some of which go back more than 150 years, describe society as a struggle between social classes competing for finite resources. The dominant class uses politics, law, and culture to impose norms on society that maintain the status quo and perpetuate societal inequities.

The Christian faith is built on a different foundation. The Bible states Jesus is the chief cornerstone of the church, the collection of genuine believers in the past, present, and future who are described as a holy temple for the Lord.

A Christian worldview uses scripture as the basis for absolute moral truth as well as the standard by which good, evil, equity, and justice are defined. Critical race theory sees oppression based on skin color as society's main problem and the transformation of structures and systems as solutions. The scriptures, by contrast, see sin as humanity's main problem and faith in Jesus Christ as the only solution. The tension between these two competing worldviews is a central theme of the book.

A Dangerous New Religion

Americans across the political spectrum have become very familiar with the core tenets of critical race theory over the past year, even if they have never taken a single course on race at a prestigious university. They hear politicians openly claim that systemic racism is embedded in the fabric of America and scholars say that the absence of racist individuals does not take away from the prevalence of institutional racism in our society. A growing number of educators openly state that meritocracy perpetuates existing power structures that are based on white supremacy and that the lived experiences and narratives of black people are a necessary counter to the objective nature of science and reason.

These developments are a source of great frustration to Americans who love their country and resent fellow citizens who cast it as a source of great evil. "Fault Lines" makes it clear that a worse fate awaits evangelicals who attempt to syncretize what Baucham sees as the new religion of antiracism.

If antiracism is a new religion, Dr. Ibram X. Kendi is its chief priest. While the Bible states that sin produces death and life is found in Christ, Kendi claims that racism is death and antiracism is life. "Fault Lines" outlines antiracism's origin story—"on the first day, white people created whiteness"—and casts racism as the faith's original sin.

Baucham also gives examples of the "work" antiracism requires from its followers. These include white Christians examining their lives as well as those of their ancestors to determine how they have perpetuated or benefited from racist systems.

Baucham then draws attention to the new canon of books and other media that evangelicals are using to treat the social sciences as lenses through which to read and understand the Bible. That approach undermines both the scripture's authority to interpret itself and its sufficiency to address all issues related to Christian doctrine and practice.

One prominent evangelical author and theologian, Jemar Tisby, recently announced he is leaving what he describes as “white evangelical spaces” due to experiences with racism, including white evangelical support of Donald Trump. Tisby also encouraged other black Christians to do the same as part of a new #LeaveLOUD movement. Less than three weeks later, Kendi announced Tisby was joining his Center for Antiracist Research as the assistant director of narrative and advocacy.

Such is the nature of the war Baucham believes critical social justice is waging on the church. The New Testament is full of warnings to the early church to guard against false and deceptive teachings because rejecting the clear application of the scriptures, even on the issue of race, can cause any believer to abandon the security of a structure whose foundation cannot be shaken for one that cannot stand the test of time.

My Time on the Fault Line

For a short period of time, my family attended the church led by Thabiti Anyabwile, one of the pastors cited as being on the opposite side of the critical social justice fault line. I found him to be a kind minister who cared for his members.

Then I saw a tweet from Anyabwile defending a theologian named Ekemini Uwan who was in the midst of a major controversy within evangelicalism for telling a mostly white room full of Christian women that they must divest from “whiteness,” which she claimed is rooted in plunder, theft, slavery, and genocide. I’m not a minister, but I know my Bible well enough to understand that no group of people, regardless of skin color, ethnicity, or nationality, have a monopoly on any particular type of sin.

Fast-forward a few years and Anyabwile openly claims that whiteness renders certain Christians unable to read their Bibles, resistance to reparations can be tied back to the story of Cain and Abel, and that people who raise genuine concerns about the state of the black family or black criminal victimization are doing so because they don’t want to support the Black Lives Matter movement.

A Firm Foundation

I don’t share this personal account to be hateful or divisive, but to illustrate that the worldview critical social justice represents is colonizing at its core. It only knows harnessing power to capture territory, and I was not willing to let my family fall victim to the incessant focus on skin color that has overtaken the minds of too many Christians today.

“Fault Lines” shows that the weapons Christians need for this ideological battle are spiritual, not physical. Christians should be a shining example to the rest of the world of what it looks like to have unity across ethnicity, tribe, and nation.

We honor God when we acknowledge all members of the human race have equal dignity and worth. We dishonor Him when we ascribe certain sins to people based on ancestry and mistreat others because of their skin color.

The sin of racism, whether expressed through ethnic hatred or partiality, is a problem of the human heart. Its solution is the gospel of Jesus Christ, not the work of antiracism.

An article by Terry Paulson titled “Victims Anonymous” was posted at townhall.com on May 16, 2021. Following is the article.

America is in vital need of a new recovery group—Victims Anonymous. There are millions of Americans dependent on government support who are trapped, addicted to government entitlements, and subsidies. This support keeps them from taking full responsibility for their own lives and taking advantage of the opportunities America provides for those willing to work hard to achieve their dreams of success.

As with any recovery group, there are steps needed in order for recovery to be realized. Recovery is a slow process of personal empowerment that combines the power of admission, recognition, and peer group support with the reliance on a higher power outside ourselves.

The Seven Steps of Victims Anonymous

1. We admitted we are trapped in an addiction to government support and have been unwilling to take responsibility for our own lives.

The victim must accept and understand that his/her condition and all of its issues are a direct result of his/her actions to remain addicted and our failure to seek self-sufficiency. The victim must reach a position of total acceptance of responsibility and reject any ideation, statements, or actions designed to blame others for their situation. Taking responsibility for one’s current need for help and the commitment to change are basic requirements for any progress toward recovery.

2. We came to believe that a commitment to God, a power greater than ourselves, can be a source of support, strength, and motivation for change.

The next important step begins with a belief that God values each and every person. We are created in His image with unique skills and potential available to fulfill our purpose and achieve our most heartfelt dreams. God has the capacity to help, support, and enable us to overcome our personal shortcomings and restore us to be the productive, responsible, and happy individuals that we were meant to be. We believe that through personal faith in God that we are capable of turning our lives around through His infinite grace, guidance, and generosity.

3. We made a searching and fearless moral inventory of ourselves.

This step requires an assessment and acceptance of our addiction, its manifestations, and effects. We must pursue this truthfully, honestly, and without any spiritual or moral cover-ups. This step helps us recognize the damage and issues that our victimhood is causing in our lives from all perspectives—self, family, society, faith, and government.

4. We admitted to God, to ourselves, and to others we value and trust the exact nature of our wrongs and responsibilities and ask for help from God and others in reforming our defects of character.

Privately held self-assessments and goals are easy to cheat on. Honesty and an unflinching desire and commitment to change are required to move from being a victim to a proud survivor. Telling others helps to make the problem real and sets the stage for meaningful and significant improvement with the help of hard work and the support of God and others.

5. We made a list of all we had blamed and taken advantage of and initiated efforts to make amends to them all.

We are encouraged to apologize publicly to those we have blamed for our personal failure, and where possible, attempt to repair the damage done to those relationships. A commitment to pay back as much of the money taken as possible is encouraged through responsible work, paying taxes, and making donations to non-profit organizations helping others break the hold of government dependence. Perfection is impossible, but we must be willing to make any amends that may be required, even if, at times, it implies some form of personal disgrace.

6. We seek restoration of a right relationship with God as we understand Him through prayer, meditation, and worship to improve our relationship with God, discover knowledge of His will for us, and secure the power to carry that out.

Prayer, meditation, and worship in a faith community of choice help connect us with the support of the divine power that is greater than our individual self. Being connected to a shared faith community provides the continual support and encouragement needed to take responsibility for our lives, our purpose, and our dreams for personal fulfillment.

7. Having had a spiritual awakening, a public confession, and a commitment to action steps designed to break our debilitating dependence, we promise to carry this message to other victim addicts and to vote for politicians who will reject government entitlements that encourage addiction, ensure our personal freedoms, and allow us to keep more of the fruits of our labor we have earned.

We reach out to others who are suffering from victimhood as we once were. Through our interactions and our intervention, we see them grow and become free of their addiction. We work diligently to elect politicians who will encourage and reward personal initiative, support free-enterprise economic policies, minimize regulations and taxes, and minimize entitlements that foster dependence and victimhood.

Unfortunately, Victims Anonymous does not currently exist. If you were to adopt these steps anyway, you would know they have made a difference when you could say: "I am not a victim. I am a survivor of past government dependence. For six months, I have had a job, and I just earned my first raise. In doing so, I'm making less because my government support has been cut again. But that will not stop me. I'm not going back. With the support of God and others, I'm taking responsibility for my life. I've stopped blaming anyone else and continue to work hard to achieve the dreams I now have. I'm proud of my progress, but I will not give up until I am in control of my life again! I thank God and all of you for your help in making this happen!"

May it be so.

An article by Gary Gindler titled "The Beasts Smell Blood" was posted at americanthinker.com on May 15, 2021. Following are excerpts of the article.

China and Russia are aggressively raising their stakes against Taiwan and Ukraine. Why? Just take a sober view of Biden's America, at war with itself. China and Russia came to a pragmatic conclusion: America in 2021 has neither the desire nor the courage nor the political will to protect itself and its allies.

■ Trump, at the end of a dinner with the Chinese leader, three months into his presidency, fired 60 Tomahawk missiles at Syria. Everything was organized so no one doubted that the missiles were intended for China and Russia's leaders, although they were fired into Syria.

■ A year later, in February 2018, a platoon of American Rangers defeated a battalion tactical group of Russian mercenaries in Syria. Of the 500 people, few survived, and all 27 tanks and armored vehicles were destroyed in a four-hour battle.

■ Both China and Russia immediately realized that, with Trump, the guy who brought down a billion dollars' worth of missiles while sweets were being served, it was necessary to remain within the bounds of decency.

Under Biden, no one is going to remain within these bounds.

On the contrary, Beijing and Moscow are well aware that Biden is a temporary, accidental person in the White House, and it is necessary to strike while the iron is hot. Under Biden, Beijing's and Moscow's expansionist plans are destined to come true.

Opportunity for Palestinians

It's not only Russia and China that are moving. Palestinian terrorists have also begun to stir.

Hamas took a long time to prepare, but it realized that it had to hurry, too. Hundreds of rockets hit Israel just days after Biden complained that in 2024, he would re-duel with Trump. Even the remote possibility of Trump's return to the White House has forced Hamas to speed up its plans. A tiny Jewish democratic oasis in a sea of Islamic terrorist groups and Islamic tyrants is being bombed because a significant number of American Jews voted thoughtlessly in last year's presidential election.

It should not be forgotten that the bombing of Israel took place just a few weeks after Joe Biden restored multimillion-dollar funding to Palestinian terrorist organizations. The basis for this decision by Biden was the fact that Trump had frozen it.

Understanding the causal relationship between "no terrorist financing—no missile attacks" and "terrorist financing—missile attacks" is unattainable for Democrats since it requires a level of intelligence not envisioned by leftist dogma. If the Democrats had any remnant of their intellect left, they would have asked Hamas, which complains all the time that it has no money for a coronavirus vaccine, where its money came from for hundreds of rockets.

Weak and decrepit

Finally, has anyone noticed a suspicious similarity in how anti-Jewish pogroms under the leadership of Antifa, BLM, or Hamas proceed? The difference between them is only geographic, not ideological.

Vile creatures around the world fear Trump, but not Biden. Hamas does not fear Biden. The Palestinian Terrorist Autonomy does not fear Biden. The Houthis do not fear the Biden administration. The Revolutionary Terrorist Guard of Iran is also not afraid of Biden. America, in their eyes, is weak and decrepit, just like the inhabitant of the White House himself.

Three months after Biden moved to the White House, suddenly, as if on command, and almost simultaneously, many domestic and international crises have arisen. Note that all these villains are in quite a hurry.

Congress passed the $2.2 trillion Heroes Act.

House Democrats said it gives money to "governments who desperately need funds."

But it also gives lots of money to people who don't need funds.

Maryland, which even The Washington Post admits is "flush with cash," got enough extra money to pass a budget that "hands bonuses to every state worker."

"There was no means test!" complains Lisa Conyers, author of "Welfare for the Rich," in my latest video.

Omni Hotels & Resorts received $68 million in loans. Major airlines got $25 billion in loans from the CARES Act.

"Who wouldn't like to play Santa Claus?" asks Conyers. "Who wouldn't like to just be able to give everybody some money?"

Welfare for the rich didn't start with coronavirus relief bills. Politicians have done it for years, and a pandemic didn't stop them.

Nevada politicians gave Oakland Raiders owner Mark Davis $750 million for a new stadium. A stadium designer says Davis insisted on the very best, including natural grass on a field that "moves in and out of the building in one piece."

Cool. But why didn't Davis pay for it himself?

"I'm not a billionaire," he said.

But he is. The team is valued at more than $3 billion, and Davis and his mom co-own 47 percent of it.

Politicians screw taxpayers to build stadiums for lots of rich people.

Minnesota gave the Minnesota Vikings $348 million for their new stadium. Santa Clara, California, gave the San Francisco 49ers $114 million, plus $850 million in loans. Team co-owner Denise York and her family are worth $3.5 billion, says Forbes. She ought to fund her own stadium.

"The taxpayers often vote for this stuff," I say to Conyers, "so they must like it."

"(T)hey're promised there's going to be all these jobs," she replies, "not only at the stadium but at the hotels that are going to rise up around the stadium."

Politicians always promise that public investment will return more in benefits to taxpayers. But it's not true.

A study by the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City found new stadiums bring in about $40 million in jobs and tax benefits, much less than the $188 million that taxpayers pay.

Handouts to other corporations fare no better.

Ohio politicians gave General Motors millions in tax credits to keep its Lordstown plant open. GM then closed the plant. Politicians let GM keep a third of the money.

Wisconsin gave nearly $3 billion in tax breaks to Foxconn because it promised to create 13,000 jobs. Now the company promises to create only 1,454.

"If you look at the cost of each job, it was a million dollars," Conyers points out.

Actually, it was more than a million.

But "If some big company is in that town and they are not paying property tax, that means every other taxpayer is covering for them," Conyers points out. "(F)ire departments still have to be paid for. Police departments still have to be paid for. Schools still have to be paid for!"

Then there's the farm subsidy scam.

Both Republicans and Democrats eagerly give your money to agribusiness, even though farmers are now richer than the average American.

The politicians claim the handouts are not a payoff for political contributions but to "make sure there's enough food to go around," since "farmers have no control over price fluctuations and the weather."

But that's absurd. Other businesses adjust to price fluctuations and weather. America doesn't subsidize fruit and vegetable farmers — yet we have plenty of fruits and vegetables.

The politicians claim they want to help "small family farms," but they give 90 percent of the subsidies to the biggest farms.

Such welfare for the rich persists because, years ago, politicians voted for a handout, and once they start giving your money away, they never stop.

"I'm an American taxpayer," says Conyers. "I don't understand why money is leaving my pocket and going into the pocket of somebody who is wealthy."

Me either.

Looking back to February, an article by RMIT University titled "Recycling Face Masks Into Roads to Tackle Covid-Generated Waste" was posted at phys.org on Feb. 2, 2021. Following is the article.

Researchers have shown how disposable face masks could be recycled to make roads, in a circular economy solution to pandemic-generated waste.

Their study shows that using the recycled face mask material to make just one kilometer of a two-lane road would use up about 3 million masks, preventing 93 tons of waste from going to landfill.

Developed by researchers at RMIT University in Melbourne, Australia, the new road-making material is a mix of shredded single-use face masks and processed building rubble designed to meet civil engineering safety standards.

Analysis shows the face masks help to add stiffness and strength to the final product, designed to be used for base layers of roads and pavements.

The study published in the journal Science of the Total Environment is the first to investigate potential civil construction applications of disposable surgical face masks.

The use of personal protective equipment (PPE) has increased dramatically during the Covid-19 pandemic, with an estimated 6.8 billion disposable face masks being used across the globe each day.

First author Dr. Mohammad Saberian said multidisciplinary and collaborative approaches were now needed to tackle the environmental impact of Covid-19, particularly the risks associated with the disposal of used PPE.

“This initial study looked at the feasibility of recycling single-use face masks into roads and we were thrilled to find it not only works, but also delivers real engineering benefits,” Saberian said.

“We hope this opens the door for further research, to work through ways of managing health and safety risks at scale and investigate whether other types of PPE would also be suitable for recycling.”

Roads are made of four layers: subgrade, base, sub-base and asphalt on top. All the layers must be both strong and flexible to withstand the pressures of heavy vehicles and prevent cracking.

Processed building rubble—known as recycled concrete aggregate (RCA)—can potentially be used on its own for the three base layers.

But the researchers found adding shredded face masks to RCA enhances the material while simultaneously addressing environmental challenges on two fronts: PPE disposal and construction waste.

Construction, renovation and demolition account for about half the waste produced annually worldwide, and in Australia, about 3.15 million tons of RCA is added to stockpiles each year rather than being reused.

The study identified an optimal mixture—1% shredded face masks to 99% RCA—that delivers on strength while maintaining good cohesion between the two materials.

The mixture performs well when tested for stress, acid and water resistance, as well as strength, deformation and dynamic properties, meeting all the relevant civil engineering specifications.

While the experimental study was conducted with a small amount of unused surgical face masks, other research has investigated effective methods for disinfecting and sterilizing used masks.

A comprehensive review of disinfection technologies found 99.9% of viruses could be killed with the simple ‘microwave method,’ where masks are sprayed with an antiseptic solution then microwaved for one minute.

In related work, the RMIT researchers have also investigated the use of shredded disposable face masks as an aggregate material for making concrete, with promising preliminary findings.

Professor Jie Li leads the RMIT School of Engineering research team, which focuses on recycling and reusing waste materials for civil construction.

Li said the team was inspired to look at the feasibility of blending face masks into construction materials after seeing so many discarded masks littering their local streets.

"We know that even if these masks are disposed of properly, they will go to landfill or they'll be incinerated," he said.

"The Covid-19 pandemic has not only created a global health and economic crisis but has also had dramatic effects on the environment.

"If we can bring circular economy thinking to this massive waste problem, we can develop the smart and sustainable solutions we need."

An article by Isabel Malsang, Eleonore Sens and Andrew Leeson titled "Pandemic Mask Mountain Sets New Recycling Challenge" was posted at phys.org on May 19, 2021. Following is the article.

Researchers in Australia want to transform single-use covid masks into road material. In the United States, the protective gear is recycled into benches. And in France, they are reborn as floor carpets for cars.

Used to curb the spread of covid-19, masks are exacerbating another pandemic: plastic pollution.

Around 129 billion disposable masks are used every month around the world, according to the American Chemical Society.

Made out of polypropylene plastic material, elastic and metal, used masks are usually thrown out in garbage bins, destined for landfills, or incinerated.

They are also littering streets, rivers and oceans, harming wildlife.

But researchers and companies are looking for ways to put masks to good use, though it is not a very profitable venture at the moment.

Garden chairs

In Britain, several hospitals have acquired a compactor made by Cardiff-based Thermal Compaction Group which melts protective gowns and surgical masks into blue slabs.

The material is then used to make garden chairs or tables.

In France, Tri-o et Greenwishes, a recycling company, picks up masks tossed in special bins used by some 30 customers, including Parisian hospitals, TV network TF1 and building materials giant Saint-Gobain.

"We had a lot of demand from our clients" to offer mask recycling services, said company president Matthieu de Chanaleilles.

The company charges fees starting at 250 euros ($300) per month to collect the trash.

At its recycling plant, staff wearing protective gear stand behind plexiglass to sort through paper tissues, gloves and cups that are thrown in mask bins by accident. Afterwards, the workers are sprayed down with disinfectant.

The sorting area is sterilized with ultraviolet lamps. Masks are kept in quarantine for a week before being handled.

Two companies based in northern France then shred the masks, disinfect them and extract the polypropylene, which is transformed into pebbles that are used to make floor carpets or other plastic parts in a car.

Tri-o et Greenwishes has recycled one tonne of masks so far and hopes to have processed 20 tonnes by the end of the year.

It's a drop in the ocean of masks.

Some 40,000 tonnes of masks were binned in France last year, without a recycling option, according to a January parliamentary report.

Long road

Making the venture profitable is a challenge.

The masks are then sent to partner facilities to be recycled into plastic granules that are sold to manufacturers that make other products such as benches, flooring surfaces or shipping pallets.

TerraCycle chief executive Tom Szaky said recycling personal protective equipment is costlier than aluminium.

"Why is, say for example, a dirty diaper, or PPE not recyclable? It's because it costs much more to collect and process and the results are worse. So no one would bother doing it because there's no money to be made," Szaky told AFP.

"So Terracycle's business says 'Well, if someone's willing to pay those actual costs, then we can perform such a service,' " he said.

In Australia, researchers at the Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology are experimenting with other solutions after being inspired by the sight of masks littering the streets.

Once disinfected and shredded, masks can be mixed with processed building rubble to create a flexible and robust material to help build roads, according to the scientists.

The researchers are now investigating their use in construction cement.

Three million masks are need to make one kilometre (half a mile) of road.

"The facemask have a good tensile strength; they can provide tensile strength to the concrete, which is very important," Mohammad Saberian, a post-doctoral research fellow at RMIT University, told AFP.

"We're currently looking for partners to use the face masks in real-world applications and to make kind of a pilot road," Saberian said.

Since publishing the research earlier this year, several industries have expressed interest, and the team was now applying for funding to further investigate the findings, which could take one to two years, he said.

Isaiah 55:6-11—"Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. 'For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,' says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word be that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it."
