Luke 21:34-36—“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take your stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Jacob Bliss titled “Democrat Haley Stevens: Chinese Communists Represent ‘Opportunity’—‘Not Bogeyman’ ” was posted at breitbart.com on June 24, 2021. Following are excerpts of the article.

Rep. Haley Stevens (D-MI) disputed any claims that Communist China is the “bogeyman,” despite constant acts of corporate espionage against American companies and the genocide of Uyghur Muslims.

Stevens, last week, was asked by Caroline Hyde during an appearance on Bloomberg Markets: The Close if the congresswoman wants the American private sector to work with China. Stevens said that she “thinks” there is export potential to work with China. The congresswoman said she talked to auto-makers and thinks America can have a presence there but does not want to “dictate the terms of business.” But, Stevens ultimately said she doesn’t understand why “everyone is painting” China as the “bogeyman,” because she thinks China has “opportunity” by using the American free market.

Breitbart News had previously reported, in 2019 there were an estimated seven million American workers had earned their living from the automotive industry either by manufacturing, selling, or servicing cars and trucks. Additionally, nearly all auto manufacturers across the world have been heavily investing in electric vehicles. Also, in 2019, General Motors (GM) had laid off thousands of American workers. At the time, the management inside GM explained their mass layoffs were a part of a “restructuring” to focus on electric and autonomous vehicles to be manufactured in China.

■ More notably, Breitbart News Senior Editor-at-Large Rebecca Mansour authored a detailed analysis on how the Obama-Biden administration originally let China buy up massive parts of the Electric Vehicle industry in the United States market from 2009 to 2016: “The biggest winner in this push for an all-electric future is China, which is eager for the transition to EV because the communist regime does not have the same access to plentiful oil and gas as American consumers. In fact, the Chinese Communist Party has made dominance of the EV industry a key goal in its ambitious China 2025 initiative, hoping to overtake Detroit as the world’s automotive capital. Indeed, China is positioning itself to do just that. Companies like Ford and General Motors have partnered with Chinese state-owned companies to develop and manufacture new electric vehicles in Asia. Ford has 16 new electric models coming out of China in the next few years, and GM intends to launch 20 electric models in China by 2023. To be fair, the entire worldwide auto industry seems eager for an all-electric future. Nearly all of the world’s auto manufacturers are investing heavily in EV. There’s a reason for this, and it has less to do with the environment and more to do with the industry’s bottom line.”

Despite Stevens claiming that China is not the “bogeyman,” recently, there has been a surge in Chinese espionage against the United States and the Chinese stealing American intellectual property. Last year, former President Donald Trump’s administration had ordered the closure of the Chinese consulate in Houston, Foreign Policy reported. This was a “significant diplomatic escalation between the two rival powers. U.S. officials who spoke to Foreign Policy indicated that the consulate closure is a response to a surge in Chinese espionage in the United States.”

In the Trump administration, Morgan Ortagus, a State Department spokesperson, said Washington directed the closure of the consulate “to protect American intellectual property and Americans’ private information.”

■ The report continued: “Ortagus did not cite a specific incident that prompted the move, but she raised accusations that China violated U.S. sovereignty. The closure was announced after a sweeping indictment was unsealed in federal court in Washington state outlining years of Chinese state-directed hacking and theft of intellectual property affecting victims across the United States and in other countries. The United States will not tolerate the PRC’s violations of our sovereignty and intimidation of our people, just as we have not tolerated the PRC’s unfair trade practices, theft of American jobs, and other egregious behavior. President Trump insists on fairness and reciprocity in U.S.-China relations,” Ortagus said, referring to the People’s Republic of China.”

Chinese officials also denied the country’s involvement in stealing American intellectual property, even though the United States has repeatedly accused them.

In a House of Representatives hearing last year, Google CEO Sundar Pichai brought up when there was a China-linked cyberattack on Google in 2009. According to CNN Business, the company said at the time there was some of its intellectual property was stolen. The report continued that the United States

“has long said that intellectual property theft has cost the US economy billions of dollars in revenue and thousands of jobs.” In turn, Chinese officials, according to the report, have since repeatedly been rejecting any of the accusations that there are “foreign companies are treated unfairly, arguing any tech secrets handed over were part of deals that had been mutually agreed upon.”

At the time, the Trump administration had “already largely blocked Chinese telecom giant Huawei from working with American suppliers, and says it’s ‘looking at’ banning the hugely popular short form video app TikTok.”

The Chinese government is committing acts of genocide against the Uyghur people. Even more so, Chinese manufacturing is using them as forced labor. A report from CNN claimed, “The Chinese government’s alleged actions in Xinjiang have violated every single provision in the United Nations’ Genocide Convention, according to an independent report by more than 50 global experts in international law, genocide and the China region.”

Looking deeper, a report from Newlines Institute for Strategy and Policy think tank in Washington, DC, which CNN reported on, claimed that the Chinese government “bears state responsibility for an ongoing genocide against the Uyghur in breach of the (UN) Genocide Convention.”

■ The report continued: “It is the first time a non-governmental organization has undertaken an independent legal analysis of the accusations of genocide in Xinjiang, including what responsibility Beijing may bear for the alleged crimes. An advance copy of the report was seen exclusively by CNN. Up to 2 million Uyghurs and other Muslim minorities are believed to have been placed in a sprawling network of detention centers across the region, according to the US State Department, where former detainees allege they were subjected to indoctrination, sexually abused and even forcibly sterilized. China denies allegations of human rights abuses, saying the centers are necessary to prevent religious extremism and terrorism.”

The Chinese have also been engaging in forced labor for manufacturing, but Stevens still considers that the United States should have good business with China. Since they have “opportunity” by using the American free market. The New York Post detailed a report that a woman in the United States had found an “SOS” box with decorations from a Sun Yi, which had writing that exposed the Chinese re-education camps.

The report noted this was not the first story that had made it out of China and the work camps. There is a book by Amelia Pang, which was detailed in the report. Pang’s book explained that China has more than one thousand “re-education” or “detox” camps providing all types of forced labor to manufacturers to turn out cheap products that can be sold everywhere. The report added the items were sold to places like Walmart to Saks Fifth Avenue. The independent Australian Strategic Policy Institute did a study that also found “between 2017 and 2019, more than 83 brands, including Nike, Apple, and BMW, were sourced from Chinese factories where workers—mainly Muslim Uyghurs—were held against their will.”

An article by Ken Blackwell titled "The Left's Next Voting Bill Is Even Worse Than HR 1" was posted at townhall.com on June 24, 2021. Following is the article.

This week, the Democrats' bill to federalize our elections, S.1, failed in the U.S. Senate. Thanks to the filibuster, the bill fell short of its needed sixty-vote threshold.

The filibuster stopped a partisan power grab that was designed to protect the Democrats' majority. S.1 was a radical bill that would have made our elections less secure, and made it easier to commit voter fraud. It even would have even banned popular voter ID laws.

We should all be thankful for Sen. Joe Manchin and Sen. Kyrsten Sinema for resisting calls from the radical left to eliminate the filibuster. Without them, we would be having a federal takeover of our elections now.

The filibuster was designed to build consensus among the states. The states would have lost power under S.1, and it was important for any fundamental restructuring of American elections had broad consensus. The filibuster worked the way it was supposed to.

Yet Americans should not let their guard down following the defeat of S.1. The Left is already pushing an even worse bill, the John Lewis Voting Rights Act.

Do not let the bill's name fool you. It is not a civil rights bill. It is an attempt to strip states of their powers to govern and run their own elections.

If you opposed S.1, then you should oppose The John Lewis Voting Rights Act. It is still a massive federal takeover of elections. It would put ideologically radical bureaucrats at the Department of Justice in charge of every single detail of our elections.

These far-left bureaucrats would have to approve every change in our elections. From large changes such as mandating voter ID to small changes from moving at the time county election offices are open from 8:30 a.m. to 8:35 a.m.

The John Lewis Voting Rights Act removes power from the people and gives it to the Washington swamp.

The Left will try to paint anyone who opposes the John Lewis Voting Rights Act as a racist or a vote suppressor. This sort of language demeans what African Americans went through to fully secure their right to vote in the 1960s. We cannot let these types of attacks stop us from fighting against a federal takeover of elections.

Federal overreach into our elections is unacceptable. It violates our original constitutional arrangement.

For over 200 years, states have run their own elections. The Left should stop trying to fundamentally transform our country and our Constitution. The U.S. Congress should stay out of election reform.

States like Arizona and Florida have passed election integrity legislation that will make their elections more free and secure. Other states should follow their lead. We do not need a federal government power grab.

An article by Jason Snead titled "There's a Reason Why Democrats Can't Get Their Election Bills Passed" was posted at cnsnews.com on June 25, 2021. Following is the article.

S.1 failed to advance in the Senate, leaving progressives in disarray. For months, activists and politicians have pushed the phony narrative that new "Jim Crow" voting laws are putting democracy in peril, all to build pressure for a sweeping federal takeover of elections. But the euphemistically-named "For the People Act" has failed to win the support of even 50 Senators, prompting progressives to begin teeing up the backup plan: H.R.4, the Voting Rights Advancement Act.

It's easy to see why S.1 stalled. The bill upends the election systems of all 50 states. Its provisions eliminate voter ID laws, let partisan operatives collect voters' ballots without supervision, and remove proven safeguards from absentee votes. It hands the franchise to convicted felons the second they walk out of prison. S.1 saddles election offices with billions of dollars in unfunded mandates while funneling millions in taxpayer money to the campaigns of the politicians voting for it. And it imposes impossible deadlines that will force states to rush wholesale changes. S.1, in short, is an unprecedented, unconstitutional overreach that risks plunging democracy's foundations into disarray.

These policies are not only unwise; they are unpopular. Recent polling shows that more than three-fourths of Americans favor photo ID laws for voting. By overwhelming margins, Americans want to add safeguards to the voting process to bolster confidence in elections. Only a tenth of the country wants vote trafficking by partisan operatives. When Americans find out what S.1 does, only 28% support it. Progressives may say that S.1 is "for the people," but they seem intent on passing it in spite of them.

For months, progressives have pushed a narrative that Republican states are passing a wave of discriminatory new laws that put democracy itself at risk. President Biden has said that states like Texas and Georgia are engaged in an "un-American" assault on voting. Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-NY) has accused conservatives of importing "autocracy."

But that overwrought rhetoric doesn't match reality. When Georgia lawmakers passed election reforms earlier this year, they expanded early voting. Peach State voters now have 17 to 19 days to cast an in-person vote, including two mandatory Saturdays and two optional Sundays. Anyone can vote by mail-in ballot, and those ballots are now protected by a sensible ID law. These policies are popular and reasonable, but politicians like President Joe Biden and activists like Stacey Abrams denounced them as "Jim Crow" racism.

They may wish they hadn't done that. This week, Sen. Joe Manchin (D-WV), the lone liberal holdout on S.1, unveiled a set of proposed changes that would win his support. Among them: a nationwide voter ID law, along with 15 days of early voting, including on two weekends. Sound familiar?

Incredibly, Abrams flipped her position almost immediately, telling CNN she would "absolutely" support policies that just months ago she denounced in the most odious terms possible. Voter ID laws are either racist, or they aren't. Abrams has already tried to claim a technicality: Manchin's proposal says voters should be able to use a utility bill if needed. But so does Georgia's new law.

What has all this corrosive and overheated rhetoric gotten the left? So far, nothing except increased distrust in our election system that has primed many Americans to view next year's elections as illegitimate if they don't go the "right" way.

With S.1's fate in doubt, congressional leaders are pivoting to H.R. 4, the "Voting Rights Advancement Act." That bill has been described as a more moderate compromise, but it is really the backup plan to put Washington in charge of elections. In fact, Speaker Nancy Pelosi declared just days ago that H.R. 4 goes "even further" than S.1.

The bill would let the federal government overrule state election laws across the nation. No state would be able to adopt a new voter ID law, for example, or improve the way it cleans its voter rolls without giving Washington the chance to block them. Just like S.1, the legislation targets commonsense laws progressive activists don't like—at least, until recently—and empowers Washington to veto them. H.R. 4 previously passed the House, and is awaiting reintroduction.

H.R. 4's defenders argue that it fights voting discrimination just like the original 1965 Voting Rights Act. Yet unlike that law, this legislation deliberately shuns objective metrics. States aren't put under federal control based on poor minority voter registration or turnout, but mainly on how often they are sued by activists. That creates a powerful incentive for partisan attorneys to file frivolous claims that inch a state closer to federal control. It even encourages activists or political parties to collude with like-minded officials and use judicial settlements to rewrite voting laws behind closed doors. This is no idle concern. Progressive groups filed more than 200 cases before last year's election, and many ended in agreements that weakened safeguards, extended deadlines, and skewed the rules of voting.

Americans deserve elections they can trust. Election safeguards don't stop people from voting, but hyperbolic rhetoric that questions the credibility of democracy might. If we want a true bipartisan solution that secures voting rights and strengthens our democracy, it's this: let the states keep working to make it easier to vote, and harder to cheat.

An article by Scott S. Powell titled "Election Integrity: The Firewall That Keeps America Free" was posted at americanthinker.com on June 26, 2021. Following are excerpts of the article.

Where I live in South Florida it's an incredible melting pot of people—immigrants from all over the world. Many of my acquaintances and friends—from Eastern and Slavic Europe and Russia, Latin America, and Southeast Asia—have commented that what they see going on in America is a fairly classic communist-type subversion. They believe that the takedown of America is well advanced and now poses a real threat to continuation of the United States as a free nation.

My immigrant and refugee friends point out that the communist playbook is really quite easy to understand. Several who lived under communist systems commented that communist revolutionaries are masters at using false fronts, whether Critical Race Theory or social justice Marxist theories of wealth redistribution to advance their real objective which is one-party rule and total control of society. While my friends see this so clearly, they are dumbfounded and mystified that so many American people remain so naïve and passive in the face of cancel culture, censorship, and creeping cultural totalitarianism that is so obviously and rapidly redefining the country.

While there are minor differences in theory amongst those who have lived under and have experienced communism up close, they basically agree that communists generally target four primary institutions to break down and replace.

- The Family unit
- Religion, Christianity in particular
- Individuality and independent thinking (which is supplanted by collectivist group think)
- Loyalty to the nation-state (which is supplanted by global and internationalist affinities).

My friends also agree on the four steps or stages that communists employ to take over targeted peoples and nations.

First, communists seek to bring about "demoralization," which takes many years—a generation or two—of brainwashing to destroy the moral fiber and integrity of the target people or country.

The second stage, which is shorter, is to bring about "destabilization," and targets the weakening of the country's economy, justice system and law enforcement, and its defense capabilities.

The third stage is to bring about a "crisis." This is the last major step in the communist playbook, which usually involves a cataclysmic event that upsets and divides the country—pitting large groups against each other, creating either civil war or simply chaos and panic.

The fourth and final stage in the realization of the communist-type society is what is called "normalization," and it is generally irreversible. That is the final stage where the new power brokers take over and the populace of the target country loses all its remaining freedoms, its connection to its past, while the new state employs censorship and propaganda to enforce acquiescence to the new communist reality being imposed.

According to the "four stages of communist revolution," the United States is now clearly in the third Crisis Stage, with division making the country nearly ungovernable. We all sense that many people in high places in the U.S. government have for many years violated their oaths of office and became compromised by gaming the system to gain wealth and stature. And with America having a corrupt two-tiered justice system that gives cover and protection to a favored political party and its chosen figures, it is only free and fair elections that are the peoples' chief constitutional check on corruption. When election integrity is lost, the country will be lost.

What is critical now is that the people fully realize that the freedoms they have enjoyed under the democratic constitutional republic of the United States can only be guaranteed at this point by election integrity. There simply is no substitute for victory in the fight to restore and protect the honesty of our electoral system. Election integrity is the indispensable firewall to keep America a free nation.

An article by Tim Graham titled "Why Do Media Consider Tortilla-Tossing Teens Bigger News Than Murder?" was posted at cnn.com on June 25, 2021. Following is the article.

Under their African-American anchor Lester Holt, the "NBC Nightly News" takes special care to report on incidents of racism and racial insensitivity . . . typically by white people. On June 22, Holt touted at the beginning of his show "a shocking racist incident on the basketball court. Tortillas hurled at a team from a majority-Latino high school. The growing outrage."

A few minutes later, this ridiculous prank received a national airing.

"After a crushing championship loss for the predominantly Hispanic Orange Glen High School basketball team from the outskirts of San Diego, insult added to injury when several players were pelted by tortillas," reported NBC's Guad Venegas. "They say fans and players from the opposing team, Coronado High, a predominantly white school in an affluent area, were throwing them."

This is not only stupid but also bound to result in disorder and even violence. The coach reported some Coronado community member brought the tortillas, so you can't just blame the teenagers. The Coronado school board denounced this post-game ugliness: "We fully condemn the racism, classism, and colorism which fueled the actions of the perpetrators." The NBC reporter added, "Members of the Orange Glen's team say the sting of defeat pales against the wounds of racism."

But there are times when you wonder about the news judgment of networks like NBC on the "wounds of racism." In assessing "minorities hardest hit," shouldn't a double-murder pack a bigger wallop than a tortilla-tossing?

On June 22, Tom Schuba of the Chicago Sun-Times reported: "Yasmin Perez and Gyovanni Arzuaga fell in love at first sight and were inseparable. They died together during a brazen weekend attack. The parents of two young children, Perez and Arzuaga were gunned down Saturday night amid Puerto Rican Day festivities in Humboldt Park. Arzuaga, 24, died that night and Perez, 25, Tuesday morning."

The young couple was involved in a minor car crash and then ambushed.

"Several people beat Perez and then shot her," chief of detectives Brendan Deenihan said, and when Arzuaga came to her aid, "he was shot by a second person 'almost execution style.'" A video widely shared on Twitter shows the couple lying in the street next to their car as the attackers ran off. The race of the killers is still unclear.

These two young Latinos were among eight people murdered in Chicago over the weekend, out of 50 shooting victims, according to the Chicago Tribune.

NBC didn't do that story, even though Lester Holt anchored the evening news for 14 years in Chicago. Apparently, the violence there is too routine to be network "news."

Jorge Bonilla, director of the Media Research Center's MRC Latino project, tweeted: "A Puerto Rican couple gets mowed down on the streets of Chicago without so much as a peep from the national Latino networks. Had an Anglo yelled 'Speak English' at them, we'd have seen multiple A-Block coverage segments splashed across all platforms."

NBC and everyone else dramatically overcovered the fake hate crime alleged by African American TV star Jussie Smollett in Chicago in 2019, so purported "thought crimes" are apparently bigger news than the worst violent crimes. We're lectured that "black lives matter," but only if they're useful in blaming white people.

This distortion is what happens when "news judgment" is overwhelmed by progressive conspiracy theories of race and systemic racism in America. The coverage of offenses depends not on their gravity but on how it serves a malignant master narrative of oppressive white privilege, patriarchy, and policing.

An article by (black mayor) Eric Johnson titled "Defunding the Police Is Ridiculous; Here's How to Do Real Police Reform" was posted at thefederalist.com on June 24, 2021. Following is the article.

By the time I heard a local activist leader shout that he had brought a group of protesters outside my house to make my children, wife, and neighbors "uncomfortable," I had mostly given up on the idea that meaningful systemic changes would come out of the movement sparked by the brutal murder of George Floyd.

I am an African American man who grew up in rough neighborhoods in Dallas during the most violent period of our nation's history. Before I became mayor, I had successfully pushed for police accountability measures and expanded educational opportunities during my nine years in the Texas legislature. I was raising two black boys in America (and have added a daughter since then). I was horrified by the death of George Floyd. And Eric Garner. And Philando Castile. And Tamir Rice. And Michael Brown. And on and on.

But like many of my fellow mayors across the country, I had become the enemy because I didn't believe in slashing the budget of our police department—which had already shrunk by hundreds of officers during the previous five years—amid staggering increases in violent crime in Dallas.

The movement, which began with bipartisan support and captured hearts and minds across the country in a way I had never before seen, was hijacked by elitist and extremist talk of “defunding” or “dismantling.” The loudest voices eschewed common ground and common sense, opting for sloganeering and an air of insatiability that repelled rather than persuaded. Many positive changes, including better use-of-force policies, came out of the movement, but many other opportunities have been squandered.

It didn’t have to be that way. And it still doesn’t.

Cities and states can implement programs now that provide for equity, improve policing, and make us less reliant on law enforcement to solve every social ill. And the federal government could support these ideas through a 21st-century crime bill. Whereas the 1994 Crime Bill centered on punishment, a new plan could focus on prevention and policing.

Now is the time to take action in a comprehensive way. Violent crime is up across the country, and underserved communities and minorities are disproportionately the victims. They deserve safety and justice. During the pandemic, I was a member of the National Commission on Covid-19 and Criminal Justice, and we collected data that showed aggravated assault rates in the United States increased 7 percent, gun assault rates went up by 22 percent, and homicides spiked by 24 percent. In Dallas, the numbers were even higher.

Police can help stop violent crime and bring criminals to justice. Over and over, defunding activists claimed that police only show up after a crime is committed—an absurd notion that suggests all crimes are just one-offs and that there is no such thing as repeat offenders and no need for detectives.

There are bad people in this world. Maybe some people could have been saved and still can be once they are in the criminal justice system. But once they victimize someone, they must be stopped. That’s why we need police, and why defunding—whatever it means—is a mistake. We also need solutions that reduce our dependence on law enforcement and prevent crimes from occurring in the first place.

Here is how we can fight crime and make our police departments better and more responsive.

- Demand and develop crime reduction plans.

Every city’s police chief should have an annual strategic plan to reduce violent crime and to engage the community. This may seem simple, but when I became mayor in June 2019, it became apparent that the police brass of the ninth-largest city in the country simply didn’t have a comprehensive crime-reduction plan. I had to demand one.

That also meant that policymakers had nothing on which they could base resource allocation decisions and had no real way to assess accountability or let their constituents know what steps were being taken or why. Accountability must start at the top.

- Offer competitive pay for police.

Simply put, you get what you pay for. Policing poses many potential dangers for both suspects and the police, and the pay isn’t always commensurate with the risks and skills required to do the job.

In 2019, we supported market-based pay increases in Dallas after years of losing some of our best young officers, whom we paid to train, to growing suburban cities with salaries that were $10,000-$15,000 a year more than what we offered. If we want good community policing, we must set high standards and pay accordingly.

- Improve accountability measures.

Those who can't meet those expectations need to find other work. The stakes are too high. A civilian police oversight board can be an important way to hold our police officers accountable.

We have enhanced ours in Dallas and hired a monitor to help review cases and recommend policy changes in line with evolving community expectations. We also need to double down on body cameras, which have allowed prosecutors, grand juries, juries, and the public to cut through the noise and see issues more clearly.

- Expand training for police officers.

Those cameras also give police something that has been used for decades in sports: game film. Video is an important training tool. And training must be intensive.

Police are expected to think like lawyers, criminologists, psychologists, and athletes. No police department worth its salt should be adhering to only the minimum prescribed state standards as they exist now. Boost the requirements, give the best available training, and correct mistakes.

- Address environmental factors that cause crime.

In August 2019, I formed the Mayor's Task Force on Safe Communities to make recommendations for policies that could reduce crime without the involvement of law enforcement. After reviewing policies in some other cities, the Task Force recommended improving lighting and remediating blight in high-crime areas.

Crime tends to exist where criminals believe no one is watching and that no one cares. We need to eliminate havens for violence. We have begun implementing these recommendations through our newly formed Office of Integrated Public Safety Solutions, and the early returns have been promising. Cities should move swiftly on place-based crime reduction strategies that don't involve law enforcement.

- Provide counseling services, early and often.

My Task Force on Safe Communities also recommended two policies aimed at changing behaviors: implementing social and emotional learning (SEL) curriculum in schools and employing violence interrupters in targeted neighborhoods. Both programs are meant to help people learn to deal with conflict in nonviolent ways.

We recently hired Youth Advocate Programs to run a violence interrupter program, and other cities have started similar programs. And Dallas ISD has expanded its SEL program, which has produced positive results.

- Handle mental health calls the right way.

Police are not equipped well enough to deal with mental health emergencies. In Dallas, we have created and expanded our RIGHT (Rapid Integrated Group Healthcare Team) Care program, which deploys mental health professionals to calls, accompanied by police. Other cities have similar programs. They are worth the cost and help cities deal with their most vulnerable residents in a caring and understanding way.

■ Create and expand summer jobs programs.

These programs are primarily meant to give young people some money and teach them life and job skills. But they also help reduce crime. One federally funded 2017 study showed that New York City's Summer Youth Employment program participants were 17 percent less likely to be arrested during the summer and 23 percent less likely to be arrested for a felony. In Dallas, we are scaling up my summer jobs program for youth called Dallas Works and hope to see similar results.

These are real solutions that do not require defunding or dismantling anything. They are about building for a better future.

They also reflect the on-the-ground reality that mayors deal with every day. We know very well that public safety is our residents' top priority. We know that our residents must feel safe to thrive and that they want to be able to call 911 and get an appropriate response when they're in a crisis. We can't expect people to strive for the American dream if they can't sleep safely and comfortably. And we can't expect people to feel safe if they don't have trust in our police officers to correctly respond to difficult situations.

The status quo isn't working for many people. It's not working for crime victims or for the victims of police brutality. We can and must do better for them and for our children. And in this country that has seen too many divisions, we must do it in a way that brings people together.

An article by Oliver North titled "Fatherless Children—The Progressive-Democrat Nightmare" was posted at townhall.com on June 29, 2021 Following is the article.

June is the month many American families celebrate Father's Day—but thanks to progressive politicians and policies, the number of us who observe the occasion is declining precipitously. Father's Day has always fallen short of generating the attention, sentimentality or commercial activity of Mother's Day. So many children in America now live in single-parent, mother-only households that fatherlessness is, like the crisis at our southern border, a disaster progressive Democrats ignore, deny and avoid.

Fatherlessness is one of the most debilitating domestic issues confronting our country. Almost 20 million children in America live in fatherless households. Approximately 40 percent of all live births in our country are to single mothers, and 90 percent of welfare recipients are single mothers. To make matters worse, children of single mothers are five times more likely to grow up in poverty than those of married couples.

Fatherlessness is a major contributing factor in significant domestic problems including drug abuse, gun violence, child abuse, sexual abuse, chronic unemployment, homelessness and suicide. This being the case, one might think the Democratic Party would use its control of the House of Representatives, Senate and White House to actively pursue solutions for fatherlessness. Sadly, they refuse to take up the issue. Why? Because progressive Democratic policies not only encourage fatherlessness, but they also foment it.

When Vice President Kamala Harris made her ill-fated trip to Mexico and Guatemala, she talked about dealing with the “root causes” of illegal immigration. She repeated the term so often even her devoted mainstream media mavens grew weary of hearing it. If our vice president and her party are truly interested in dealing with the “root causes” of the problems facing our country, fatherlessness should be at the top of their to-do list. Solve the fatherless problem, and you go a long way toward solving other domestic problems.

Consider how fatherlessness contributes to the cultural degradation afflicting American society. The overwhelming majority of mass shooters, homeless youth, runaways, youth suicide victims, youth drug abusers, rapists, child abusers and incarcerated youth grew up in fatherless families. Fatherless children drop out of high school and experience behavioral disorders at rates more than double those of their counterparts from two-parent families. If Harris really wants to talk about the “root causes” of issues facing America, fatherlessness would be a good place to start.

In examining the fatherless problem, you don’t get far before running squarely into some evidence “woke” Democrats deem off limits. One of the inconvenient facts Democrats sweep under the rug is a major cause of fatherless families in America: our broken, ubiquitous welfare system. Originally envisioned as a temporary safety net to tide families over during hard times, under President Lyndon Johnson, welfare became a way of life—not to mention a way to create a solid voting block for Democrats.

Over the years, Johnson’s progressive Democratic successors have significantly increased the pay, benefits and duration for welfare recipients. Today, living on the government dole, once viewed as a temporary safety net, has evolved into a permanent way of life. Government welfare checks have all but eliminated the dignity of work. Worse yet, it is a way of life passed from generation to generation.

Rather than solve poverty, welfare perpetuates it. That’s because most welfare programs discourage marriage. Single mothers on welfare who get married run the risk of losing their child support entitlement. In welfare circles, this is known as the “man in the house rule.” In other words, welfare encourages fatherlessness by paying mothers to remain single and to have additional fatherless children. If “progressives” really want to reduce gun violence, child abuse, drug abuse, sexual abuse and youth suicide, they can start by reducing fatherlessness.

Isaiah 55:6-11—“Seek you the LORD while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the LORD, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the LORD. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word be that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
