Luke 21:34-36—“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take your stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

An article by Pat Buchanan titled “Can Poland Be Poland—and Stay in the EU?” was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 26, 2021. Following is the article.

“Let Poland be Poland!”

That was the call of American conservatives, four decades ago, when the Solidarity movement of labor leader Lech Walesa arose in the port city of Gdansk to demand their freedom of the Communist system imposed upon Poland by the Soviet Union after World War II.

A decade later, Poland broke free of the Soviet Bloc and Warsaw Pact, and later joined the European Union and NATO.

The question that has arisen today also has to do with issues of Polish identity and independence.

Specifically, can Poland be Poland—and still remain in the EU?

In recent years, the ruling Law and Justice Party has revised its governmental structures. The judiciary has been subordinated, brought under greater central supervision and control, and a disciplinary chamber has been established and empowered to remove judges.

Such action, says the EU Commission in Brussels, violates basic EU law, which applies to all member states and trumps national law.

Brussels wants the chamber abolished.

Moreover, on issues such as homosexuality, abortion and the media, the Polish government has taken stands more consistent with its Catholic traditions than with the social agenda of a secularized Europe.

The same holds true for the Hungary of Prime Minister Viktor Orban. Poland and Hungary are ostracized as "illiberal democracies."

At a rally of tens of thousands in Budapest Saturday, Orban told supporters that Washington, the EU in Brussels, and billionaire George Soros are using their money, media and networks to bring to power the Hungarian leftist opposition in next April's parliamentary elections.

"But what matters," said a defiant Orban, "is not what they in Brussels, in Washington and in the media, which is directed from abroad, want. It will be Hungarians deciding about their own fate.

"Our strength is in our unity . . . We believe in the same values: family, nation and a strong and independent Hungary."

Let Hungary be Hungary.

In this social-cultural-moral clash inside the EU, outsider Vladimir Putin comes down on the side of the traditionalists and nationalists in countries where Christianity retains a hold against secularism.

This weekend, Moscow released excerpts of Putin's blistering attack on a woke West at last week's gathering of the Valdai Discussion Club in Sochi:

"We're surprised to see things happening in countries that see themselves as flagships of progress," said Putin. "The struggle for equality and against discrimination turns into aggressive dogmatism verging on absurdity.

"Opposing racism is a necessary and noble thing, but the new 'culture of abolition' turns into 'reverse discrimination' . . . Here in Russia the absolute majority of our citizens don't care what color a person's skin is.

"People who dare to say that men and women still exist as a biological fact are almost ostracized . . . not to mention the simply monstrous fact that children today are taught from a young age that a boy can easily become a girl and vice versa.

"Let's call a spade a spade: This simply verges on crimes against humanity under the banner of progress."

In the clash between Poland and the EU, German Chancellor Angela Merkel has urged that a solution be found acceptable to both, rather than engaging in a long and bitter battle that leaves one side victorious and the other estranged.

Yet, today, Poland is being threatened with economic sanctions, including a possible withholding of annual EU stipends and money set aside for EU nations to combat the covid-19 pandemic.

Responding to these threats, Prime Minister Mateusz Morawiecki is accusing the EU of "blackmailing" Poland and holding a "gun to our head."

"If you want to make Europe into a nation-less superstate," says Morawiecki, "first gain the consent of all European countries and societies for this."

Membership in the EU is popular in Poland, and the government has not threatened a walkout, a "Polexit," like the "Brexit" that British Tories voted for in 2016 and carried out.

Still, Brussels fears that successful Polish defiance of its demands could lead other EU nations to make demands, and the grand project of creating a European super-state, a One Europe whose member nations are accorded limited rights similar to those of the 50 states of the American Union, could collapse and fall apart.

National governments receive from membership in the EU not only the benefits of open markets, free trade and travel from one nation to another, but also, for nations like Poland and others in eastern and southern Europe, annual transfer of wealth from the EU.

The chokehold the EU has on its members is money. Brussels can cut off the funds transferred annually to Poland, as well as funds voted to deal with the covid-19 pandemic, together a goodly slice of Poland's GDP.

The questions raised by the rebellious Poles are fundamental: Which takes precedence, when they come into conflict, Poland's constitution and Poland's laws, or the laws of the European Union?

Conflict appears inevitable, and the Poles will ultimately have to decide whether their country and constitution transcend EU law, or the reverse is now true.

An article by Ken Blackwell titled "Big Tech Is Canceling Your Voice and Now . . . Your Vote " was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 26, 2021. Following is the article.

Americans are aware Big Tech has been censoring, shadow banning, and/or de-platforming people for years. These social media sites regularly suppress information they don't like, and outright ban those with views that are antithetical to their ideology.

The argument from the political right and the left is basically that Congress should regulate these entities. Conservatives say more content should be allowed; Liberals say there should be much less.

Regardless of any potential congressional regulations, you know Big Tech is shutting down your voice, but what you may not know is that Big Tech may also be shutting down your vote.

In the face of an unprecedented, unforeseen current global pandemic, rogue Secretaries of State, Attorneys General, Governors, State Supreme Courts, Election Boards, and many others, decided to cash in on the left's well-known, and often-used axiom: "Never let a serious crisis go to waste."

The US Constitution gives the authority to decide the manner in which states conduct elections to state legislatures, but these elected officials used Coronavirus to push radical rule changes that in many cases violated their own state law. Simultaneously, Congress passed the Covid Aid, Relief and Economic Security Act (CARES Act)—which gave $339.8 billion to state and local governments. After violating laws and passing more than a trillion dollars in aid, it still wasn't enough for liberals.

Enter Big Tech.

Facebook CEO, Mark Zuckerberg, and his wife Priscilla Chan poured in nearly $400 million to the Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL) and the Center for Election Innovation and Research (CEIR) under the guise of helping states conduct elections. CTCL and CEIR, in turn, gave grants to counties under the auspices of taking extraordinary measures to properly handle the election amid the covid-19 pandemic.

Thanks to the Zuckerbergs' donation, 2,500 election departments across 49 states received 'Zuckerbucks'. On its face, this seems like an admirable act of charity, administered equally to all states and their people to conduct free and fair elections in the face of a global crisis...until you follow the money.

The Thomas More Society and the Amistad Project shed light on this when they released a report in January of 2021 showing Zuckerbucks were in fact politically targeted to only benefit certain voters in certain areas—potentially violating the law in the process.

The reports found that in Wisconsin, funds provided allowed traditionally liberal strongholds of Green Bay, Kenosha, Madison, Milwaukee, and Racine to spend $47 per voter to get out the vote, while traditionally conservative areas of the state were only allocated somewhere between four to seven dollars per voter.

In predominately liberal Delaware County, Pennsylvania, the funds were used to create a high volume of voter drop boxes—one for every four square miles—or one for every 4,000 voters. In the 59 counties carried by President Donald Trump in 2016, there was only one drop box for every 1,100 square miles—or one for every 72,000 voters.

Perhaps more stark is that three Georgia counties—Cobb, Fulton, and Gwinnett, all historically Democrat voting counties—received more than $15 million in grant money from CTCL. That accounted for 76 percent of President Joe Biden's vote margin gain relative to Hillary Clinton's 2016 performance.

There have also been allegations that election officials were literally bought off with Zuckerberg-funded grant money. Reports have circulated that Michigan Secretary of State, Jocelyn Benson, had ties to a 501(c)(3) called the Michigan Center for Election Law and Administration (MCELA) which received $12 million from CEIR. According to the report, the MCELA spent 99 percent of this money with two political consulting firms which only represented left-leaning clients.

In fact, New York has double the population of Michigan, but received just $5 million—less than half of Michigan’s funding. As conservatives pointed out at the time, if the funds were truly meant ‘to provide nonpartisan, accurate, and official voting information to the public,’ why did more populous but uncompetitive states receive less money?”

Good question.

The concern over Big Tech’s blatant unequal application of their terms of service is a serious problem—as conservative viewpoints and inconvenient truths continue to be crushed across their platforms. However, Big Tech’s new found desire to use hundreds of millions of dollars to tip the scales in our elections is unprecedented.

And you thought Big Tech was only canceling your voice . . . think again.

An article by (black journalist) Will Alexander titled “CRT, Anti-Racism, BLM: Legacies of a Slave Mentality” was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 21, 2021. Following is the article.

These days, “black oppression” is a tactic used in dirty politics. But in my early life, it was very real. The Jim Crow days were a landscaped wilderness between slavery and freedom—a mirage of freedom.

But I’ll spare the stories. It’s over. Holding on to that stuff is like walking around with a corpse on your back. Drag it around for too long and your soul rots from moral gangrene—a spirit of revenge if you have power; a spirit of resentment if you don’t. If you have both, you become Maxine Waters. So, no.

During the civil rights days, any time MLK wanted to give Southern blacks hope that freedom would come someday, he used the imagery of the Hebrew slaves escaping Egypt, enduring the wilderness, and finally reaching the Promised Land.

“We’ve got some difficult days ahead,” said this modern-day Moses. “But it doesn’t matter with me now. Because I’ve been to the mountaintop . . . And I’ve seen the Promised Land. I may not get there with you. But I want you to know tonight that we, as a people, will get to the Promised Land.”

Today, 156 years after the death of slavery and after Jim Crow’s been a corpse for 56 years, the question of whether American blacks have reached the “Promised Land,” remarkably, depends on whom you ask.

It reminds me of the real Moses who was famous for his headaches while leading ex-slaves with two different attitudes toward their predicament. Most saw the glass as half empty; a few, half full.

Ex-slaves who saw the glass as half empty died in the wilderness. All of them. God Himself wouldn't put up with their incessant complaining and protests. For the rest, a trip that could've taken 11 days, took 40 years. Why? Because too many of them, although free, still thought and acted like slaves.

In Numbers 13:21, the Hebrews were on the outskirts of Canaan, the Promised Land, a land "flowing with milk and honey." Moses sent spies to check it out and bring word back. Discouraged men, after seeing the gargantuan challenges, brought back an "evil report"—fake news from the Canaan News Network (CNN).

"We be not able to go up against the people," they said. "For they are stronger than we." The people of that land are giants and "we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so were we in their sight."

Caleb and Joshua disagreed. With God on their side, the Hebrews were the real giants, they said.

"Let us go up at once, and possess it," said Caleb, "for we are well able to overcome it."

But the people—distracted by uncertainty, suffering without luxuries, enough water only to stay alive, and monotonous food—surrendered to a slave's mentality. So the "we be not able" crowd split from the "we are well able" crowd.

They complained against Moses, protested against God, and picketed for the Hebrews to "make a captain" who could lead them back to the government that enslaved them. That wasn't an option. They died in the wilderness between Egypt and the Promised Land.

Hebrews who refused to give in to the slave mentality went on to clumsily influence the course of history. To this day, the progeny of these Hebrew ex-slaves—the Jewish people—prosper far beyond their numbers while facing down deep hatred. And they prosper without the incessant complaining, protesting, and excuse-making that got their ancestors stuck in the wilderness. Lesson learned.

Blacks are in a similar predicament today—the discouraged ones. But it's much stranger. They're stuck in a self-imposed wilderness inside a "Promised Land" flowing with more milk and honey than any nation in history. And they're free.

But they've "made captains" who create imaginary impediments that they say still enslave blacks in America. "You be not able," they say. These are critical race theorists, anti-racists, and BLMers who have no incentive to give up the slave mentality because, rather than being punished, their bickering gets rewarded.

So they've built a Wilderness Industry—people and organizations skilled at making complaints, protests, and excuses bloom in the desert. There are workshops, degrees, jobs and careers, how-to books, political and social acclaim, and big money. Worse, they're using the Wilderness Industry to put the rest of us in slavery.

"Antiracism is a transformative concept that reorients and reenergizes the conversation about racism," writes Ibram X. Kendi in How To Be An Antiracist, (2019), whose speeches earn $20,000. "At its core, racism is a powerful system that creates false hierarchies of human value; its warped logic extends beyond race, from the way we regard people of different ethnicities or skin colors to the way we treat people of different sexes, gender identities, and body types."

Get that? Me either. But I think he's saying: "All whites are racists. The 'system' is racist. It always will be. So we must dismantle it."

The Wilderness Industry has created new terms and tactics, not to solve problems, but to dignify resentment, hide the real causes of disparities, and spread the slave (victim) mentality to as many discouraged groups as possible.

Here's a morsel you'll find in Critical Race Theory (Third Edition), by Richard Delgado and Jean Stefancic (2017):

Critical race theorists "urge jury nullification to combat the disproportionate incarceration of young black men," the authors write. "If the jury believes that the police system is racist or that the young man is of more use to the community free than behind bars, it will vote to acquit."

Never mind that the crime, especially violent crime, that young black men commit is wildly disproportionate. But facts don't matter. These people are not paid to solve problems; they're paid to come up with flatulent terms that make complaining sound intelligent. Like, internal colonialism, interest convergence, language rights, Anglo-centric standards, counterstorytelling, differential racialization, blah, blah.

Meanwhile, in troubled black neighborhoods, cultural cancer metastasizes to Stage IV. Since it's become unfixable, these new overseers stay busy building towers of racial babel using jerry-rigged words that cover up the real mess.

Yet, no matter how many people suffer, they are somehow insulated from accountability as they deliberately wander in a fake wilderness advocating for hordes of discouraged blacks to be shipped onto government doles—the new slavery.

The old slavery is dead. Jim Crow is a corpse. But the slave mentality thrives.

An article by Neil Patel titled "Understanding the Danger America Faces From the Radical Spending Bill Democrats Want to Jam Through" was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 22, 2021. Following is the article.

---

It's hard to overstate how bonkers the American left has gone. If conservatives weren't in such a state of disarray, they would be dominating American politics like never before.

President Joe Biden and leading Democrats somehow convinced themselves the 2020 election was a call to fundamentally transform America into a socialist country. They decided countries don't need borders. They decided police and other law enforcement don't deserve the backing of elected politicians. They decided the way to overcome racism is by literally dividing people by race. They have implemented policies to deter American energy production and thereby added to an energy price spike. They have implemented policies that take away incentives to work and thereby contributed to a labor shortage. They have even ignored advice from military leaders resulting in the U.S. government abandoning American citizens in a terrorist state.

Luckily for anyone who cares about the country's future, this insanity is still a hard sell to regular Americans. The president's tanking poll numbers confirm America's hesitation to buy what the administration is selling. The left is not deterred, though. As has been true throughout history, hardcore left-wing ideologues are comfortable overcoming public resistance if need be. They are positive they know the best way ahead. Anyone who gets in the way is evil and must be crushed.

We are seeing this play out today in the debate over the multitrillion-dollar "transform America" legislation the Democrats are trying to jam through Congress. The so-called Build Back Better legislation aims to cement a hard lurch left for America. America has never been a socialist country; this legislation aims to change that. Thankfully, even with Republican ineptness nearing peak form, the legislation seems stalled for a moment. This stall has resulted in a political tantrum on the left.

The focus of the left's anger has been moderate Democratic Sens. Kyrsten Sinema and Joe Manchin. For daring to question the merits of this radical legislation, Manchin and Sinema have come under full-throated attack from the left and their allies in the so-called mainstream media. Never mind that the Senate is divided 50-50. Never mind that almost nobody voted for extreme left-wing government.

Manchin and Sinema are under extreme pressure to go along. There are almost no media articles extolling their independence and moderation. Instead, they are attacked daily as unreasonable obstructionists. Left-wing activists have even been dispatched to harass these senators in person.

Amazingly, in the midst of this media pressure campaign, the second target of the Democrats' anger is the press corps itself. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi came out and publicly scolded the press for not effectively marketing the multitrillion-dollar spending monstrosity to the American people. On one level, it was refreshing for Pelosi to tacitly admit that she views the press as her marketing team. The press does usually market the left's policies to the American people. This is how left-wing policy often goes mainstream. But even the press corps can't effectively sell socialism in America. Pelosi's mad about that. The rest of us should be happy, but we're hanging by a thread.

You don't have to go deep under the hood to understand why the stalled socialist legislation is such a hard sell to moderates. In almost every area that America is currently struggling with, the Democrats spending bonanza would make things worse.

■ No. 1: America's labor shortage.

Not enough people are working. Businesses can't find workers. The Democrats legislation will make this worse in two ways. First, increasing taxes, especially on small businesses, will reduce hiring incentives that expand and create jobs. Second, adding new social spending problems will further disincentivize people from returning to the workforce.

■ No. 2: Skyrocketing inflation.

Prices are up. Inflation is booming under Biden. There are many causes for the runaway inflation. covid-19 has played a role, but the Federal Reserve's loose monetary policy and the government's record spending have contributed greatly to the price increases. Adding yet another gusher of federal spending in this environment is beyond crazy.

■ No. 3: Energy price spikes.

The worst part of the inflation increase for most Americans has been the spike in energy prices. People see this every week at the gas station and every month in their home heating bill. The Democrats' legislation will make energy costs much worse. In fact, the legislation is designed to do just that: Rising prices for fossil fuels are an integral part of the left's strategy to fundamentally transform America's energy sector in the name of climate change. Current protestations aside, the left wants energy prices to go up. The legislation will achieve that. The problem is that the bill will disincentivize investment in fossil fuels and subsidize investment in renewable energy. This has been the left's strategy for a while now, and it's leading to price spikes. Renewable energy is not filling the gap left by reduced fossil fuel production.

■ No. 4: Empty shelves.

Americans don't do empty shelves. We aren't the Soviet Union or Cuba. The Biden administration's attempts to mock these concerns are going to bite them hard politically if Christmas shelves are empty. covid-19 may have played a part, but the labor market policies Democrats are introducing will further the supply chain disruptions.

A majority of Americans now think the government is trying to do too much, according to the latest Gallup polling. The spending bonanza Democrats are foisting on America would ask government to do a lot more—more than any American government has ever attempted. The press has worked hard to make this radical policy seem normal. Even that hasn't been enough. Let's hope it stays that way.

An article by Scott Morefield titled "Should the Immuno-Compromised Be Allowed to Force Everyone to Mask and Be Vaccinated?" was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 25, 2021. Following are excerpts of the article.

Discussions about the philosophical and ethical case behind coronavirus mitigation measures have abounded since the world tragically changed for the worse in March 2020. For many, including those of us on Team Reality, such measures—like lockdowns, masking, and vaccine mandates—were either overly burdensome, completely useless, or both. Lockdowns helped, for a short while, but anyone with an IQ over 60 should have known they weren't sustainable and would do far more harm than good. Masks did absolutely nothing, and vaccine mandates were both tyrannical and, over time, are proving to be utterly useless and potentially harmful as the vaccine continues to fade in efficacy.

Members of Team Apocalypse, on the other hand, tend to think anything and everything is acceptable, for an indefinite period of time, if there is even the slightest chance those things might 'prevent' even one death from covid-19, the worstest plague ever (yes, they also tend to severely overstate the real risks of the virus). Their declarations about the insane 'mitigations' they expect the world to follow to 'protect' them, usually presented on Twitter (that great battleground of ideas, even when its scales are being pressed to the left's favor by our Tech overlords), rarely include any sort of logical reasoning. When pressed on a sunset to their insanity, they typically will ignore the question or respond with a shrill "As long as it takes!" Whether they will admit it or not, their actions and thought processes subscribe to the "Zero covid" mentality, a cult that insists humanity shouldn't get back to real normal until covid-19 has been eliminated.

Except, covid-19 will never be eliminated. It is, after all, a highly contagious respiratory virus that has animal reservoirs and is quickly becoming endemic. As such, the risk of contracting the virus will always exist, even if diminished from the pandemic's height. And there's the rub, isn't it? That concept of risk, a notion that most leftists and even some on the right who have joined the Branch covidian cult refuse to acknowledge or even try to understand. Instead, they want to run YOUR lives because they think that doing so will diminish or eliminate THEIR risk of getting sick.

Although I do from time to time, at least in my own mind, question the motives of certain Team Apocalypse members because their stated policies are SO bad, SO draconian, SO unworkable and unsustainable that it's hard to imagine they don't mean long-term harm to humanity, by and large I acknowledge that most people don't want other people to die. This is not, however, a courtesy they extend to us. To them, we are grandma killers, superspreaders, and plague-infested lab rats that must be contained. We are guilty before proven innocent and our sentence, if we allow them to impose it, will be quarterly booster shots, rolling lockdowns, and a denial of the right to breathe freely in society ever again. To them, countless deaths from overdoses, suicides, unneeded vaccines, and delayed medical treatments are worth it so long as THEY don't get even the mildest case of covid-19.

It's utterly selfish, of course, but ever true to form, they call US selfish for pushing back. To give you an example of this mentality, consider this tweet from a Twitter user who goes by the name "Bethie" in a thread about country singer Travis Tritt's brave decision to refuse to play at venues that have mask and vaccine mandates:

“Not all of his fans,” Bethie wrote. “Well, this is upsetting but count me out as I don’t seem to matter given that I can only safely attend events where organizers value me too. But, ya know, cancer, so screw me right? Good to know who chooses to pander cuz that’s what this is.”

Now assuming Bethie is telling the truth, I truly feel bad for her and others in her predicament. However, the reality is the world can’t stop to fully ‘protect’ every immunocompromised person out there, nor should it. Though doubtless there are plenty of Team Apocalypse members who would have the entirety of humanity in HAZMAT suits forever if they had the power, it’s just not feasible or sustainable.

Here’s what I wrote in response to Bethie: “I am truly sorry you are sick and hope you get better. However, for an event like this, couldn’t you just wear an N95 mask that’s properly fitted to protect yourself instead of imposing on everyone else?”

To me, this is a more than reasonable ask, especially given that the vaccine program isn’t working to stop the spread of anything and cloth masks never helped either. N95s are clunky, expensive, and wreak havoc on the environment, but they actually do provide at least some protection against airborne pathogens. So why not ask the vulnerable to wear them, voluntarily of course? Then, everyone else will know to give them a bit of distance. Incidentally, this is pretty much how things are running in ‘red’ places already, and it seems to be working well. It’s certainly a safer, less society-destroying compromise than forcing 2-year-olds to wear masks forever. But no, I’m a ‘bad person,’ or something, for suggesting it.

[At this point, Mr. Morefield shared some of the crass responses to his tweet—which will not be posted here.]

So yeah, pretty standard stuff for the covid cult. To its members, stopping covid is the only moral goal, and anything that gets in the way of that is by definition ‘immoral.’ To them, deaths from lockdowns and from covid vaccines—especially ones given to people not at any statistical risk from covid—are merely collateral damage. They are the selfish ones, yet they have the gall to slap that label on anyone who disagrees with them.

For countless reasons which have been relentlessly listed in this column and hundreds of other places, masks, lockdowns, and forced-vaccines are a terrible burden on society that the real threat of covid-19 never made justifiable. We’re not talking about common-sense things like asking sick people to stay home, but rather forever treating every unmasked, unvaccinated person as disease vectors.

Yes, the immuno-compromised are in a tough situation. I feel badly for them and fully realize that I could be in their shoes someday. However, it’s impossible and unsustainable to force these things on everyone in a futile effort to ‘protect’ them, especially when they can take effective steps to protect themselves.

An article by Dennis Prager titled "Someone Must Go to Prison for the Killing of Halyna Hutchins" was posted at townhall.com on Oct. 26, 2021. Following is the article.

If no one goes to prison for actor Alec Baldwin's accidental killing of cinematographer Halyna Hutchins, our society will have failed a crucial moral test.

We will be saying human life is not sacred; that it, in effect, is of little or no consequence.

The killing was, we presume, unintentional (though we do not know for sure, as the possibility remains that someone had motive to load the gun with real ammunition). But that does not mean that no one should be held culpable and punished. Society must regard the taking of human life—even when unintentional—as something terrible.

I learned this principle from the Bible, which was, until the last century, the source of America's and the Western world's moral values.

This principle is repeated over and over in the Bible's first five books (the Torah), the source of all biblical laws. This repetition strongly indicates how seriously the Bible takes this issue.

First example

Exodus 21:28: "When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned . . ."

The obvious question is: Why would the ox be put to death? It is surely not guilty of murder; oxen have no free will. The reason it is put to death is that the killing of a human being cannot go unpunished.

The Jewish Bible scholar, professor Nahum Sarna, wrote:

"The execution of the ox was carried out in the presence, and with the participation, of the entire community (the animal was stoned, not merely killed)—implying the killing of a human being is a source of mass pollution and the proceedings had an expiatory function. The killing of a homicidal beast is ordained in Genesis 9:5-6: 'For your own life-blood I will require a reckoning: I will require it of every beast . . . Whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed, for in His image did God make man.' The sanctity of human life is such as to make bloodshed the consummate offense, one viewed with unspeakable horror. Both man and beast that destroy human life are thereafter tainted by bloodguilt."

Second example

Deuteronomy 19:5: "(If) a man goes with his neighbor into a grove to cut wood; and as his hand swings the ax to cut down a tree, the ax-head flies off the handle and strikes the other so that he dies, that man shall flee to one of these cities and live."

Again, the Bible describes a homicide that is entirely accidental. But the person who accidentally committed the homicide is not free to live a normal life. He cannot go on with life as if nothing happened. While he is not to be executed, he must flee to one of three “cities of refuge” in ancient Israel. There he may not be killed or otherwise hurt by a member of the killed man’s family. But he is not a completely free man.

In my Bible commentary, “The Rational Bible,” I quote Leeor Gottlieb, a professor of Bible at Israel’s Bar-Ilan University: “The Torah is morally ahead of some modern societies, in which people’s lives go on nearly uninterrupted if they killed unintentionally.”

As the Bible explains five verses later:

“Thus blood of the innocent will not be shed, bringing bloodguilt upon you in the land that the Lord your God is allotting to you.”

Human bloodshed brings bloodguilt upon the land.

Third example

Deuteronomy 21:1-4 and 7: “If, in the land that the Lord your God is assigning you to possess, someone slain is found lying in the open, the identity of the slayer not being known, your elders and magistrates shall go out and measure the distances from the corpse to the nearby towns . . . And they shall make this declaration: ‘Our hands did not shed this blood, nor did our eyes see it done. Absolve, O Lord, Your people Israel whom You redeemed, and do not let guilt for the blood of the innocent remain among Your people Israel.’ And they will be absolved of bloodguilt.”

Unlike the previous instance, in which the (unintentional) killer is known, the killer of the slain man found “in the open” is not known. Nevertheless, the community is still held accountable and must ask for forgiveness for not preventing a homicide.

Fourth example

The final example is not biblical but from my radio show. Many years ago, a woman called to tell me about an ostrich raised on her family’s ostrich farm. One day, this ostrich kicked her father to death. I asked the woman what was done to the ostrich. “Nothing,” she replied.

Given my biblical background, I was taken aback.

“So you tell people who visit your farm, ‘This is the ostrich that killed my father?’”

“Yes,” she responded.

In my view, that cheapened her father’s life and death.

How much more so will Halyna Hutchins’ life and death be cheapened if no one pays a steep price—for a death that was entirely preventable had proper precautions been followed?

But given how little the Bible means to most Americans today, I would not be surprised if no one goes to prison.

Isaiah 55:6-11—“Seek you the LORD while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the LORD, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the LORD. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word be that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
