Luke 21:34-36–“But take heed to yourselves, lest your souls be weighed down with self-indulgence, and drunkenness, or the anxieties of this life, and that day come on you suddenly, like a falling trap; for it will come on all dwellers on the face of the whole earth. But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take you stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

Looking back to October 2015, an article by Danny Vinik titled “Obama’s Effort to ‘Nudge’ America” was posted at politico.com on Oct. 15, 2015. Following are excerpts of the article.

For the past year, the Obama administration has been running an experiment: Is it possible to make policy more effective by using psychology on citizens?

The nickname is “nudging”– the idea that policymakers can change people’s behavior just by presenting choices or information differently. The classic example is requiring people to opt out of being an organ donor, instead of opting in–when they sign up for a driver’s license. Without any change in rules, the small tweak has boosted the number of registered organ donors in many states.

Nudging has gained a lot of high-profile advocates, including behavioral-law guru Cass Sunstein and former budget czar Peter Orszag. Not everyone likes the idea – “the behaviorists are saying that you, consumer, are stupid,” said Bill Shughart, a professor of public choice at Utah State University – but President Obama was intrigued enough that he actually hired Sunstein (a law professor at Harvard who co-wrote the best-known book about the topic, “Nudge”).

The president officially adopted the idea last year when he launched the White House’s Social and Behavioral Science Team (SBST), a cross-agency effort to bring behavioral science research into the policymaking process. Now the team has published its first annual report on this experiment.

How did it go? Mostly, the efforts appear to have worked, though it’s hard to know how much impact they'll have. In part this is because the SBST's efforts are small – just 15 proof-of-concept projects in its first year – and limited by agencies and laws in how bold they could be. The SBST team's report – 13 of its projects worked; one didn't; and one was hard to tell.

That's a good result for a small and inexpensive office. But when it comes to whether behavioral economics could offer a new tool to push Americans towards different choices in big-ticket areas like healthcare (or whether Americans would actually want that), that evidence is still out.

Looking back to August 2022, an article Staff titled “The Best (and Worst) Nudges, According to ‘Center for Health Incentives and Behavioral Economics’ [CHIBE] Affiliates” was posted at chibe.upenn.edu on Aug. 2, 2022. Following are excerpts of the article.

One of the tools behavioral economists use to influence people's behavior is a nudge. What exactly is a nudge? Richard Thaler, PhD, and Cass Sunstein, JD, are credited with popularizing the term in their book “Nudge” by saying: “A nudge, as we will use the term, is any aspect of the choice architecture that alters people's behavior in a predictable way without forbidding any options or significantly changing their economic incentives. To count as a mere nudge, the intervention must be easy and cheap to avoid. Nudges are not mandates. Putting fruit at eye level counts as a nudge. Banning junk food does not.”

- Shivan Mehta (MD, MBA) said one of his favorite nudges is leveraging social norms to reduce energy consumption, like those utility bills that note how much energy your household is using compared to other households in the area.

“It is low cost to administer and effective at behavior change, but also user friendly,” Dr. Mehta said. “When I look at my energy bill, I always look to see how I compare to my neighbors.”

- Gretchen Chapman (PhD) mentioned that leveraging social norms was one of her favorite nudges.

“My vote is for social norms because once established, they have a powerful effect on behavior,” Dr. Chapman said. “I notice that I never wear a mask to staff meetings, because no one else is wearing one. But I frequently wear one at faculty meetings, because many other people are wearing them. The risk of transmission is similarly low at these different meetings, but without even deliberating, I tend to mimic what others are doing.”

- Amol Navathe (MD, PhD) said his least favorite nudge is the auto-play feature that YouTube and Netflix use, because it works against personal choice.

“As soon as you pause, it starts playing something for you and doesn't give time for a conscious choice to be made,” Dr. Navathe said. “It's pernicious behavioral economics design!”

Isaiah 55:6-11—“Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
