But beware of slumbering; and every moment pray that you may be fully strengthened to escape from all these coming evils, and to take you stand in the presence of the Son of Man” (Weymouth New Testament).

Looking back to September/October 2017, an article by Michael Crowley titled “The Deep State Is Real” was posted at politico.com in September/October 2017. Following are excerpt of the article.

At a conference in mid-July, Barack Obama’s CIA Director (John Brennan) remarked that executive branch officials have an “obligation . . . to refuse to carry out” outrageous or anti-democratic orders from President Donald Trump. The comment quickly caught the attention of Rush Limbaugh, who saw nothing short of a threat to the republic.

A year ago, the term “deep state” was the province of Edward Snowden acolytes and fans of paperback espionage thrillers. Today, Limbaugh takes it for granted that his millions of listeners know what it meant.

The deep state entered America’s national discourse in 2017 with the feeling of an already familiar character, ready to assume a starring role as hero or villain – depending on how you feel about Trump.

It’s easy to dismiss the idea as the breathless complaint of a frustrated president who hasn’t learned to work the system. But it’s not that simple: There really is a kind of cabal that operates independently of elected officials in Washington – even if it’s not quite what Trump or his conservative allies think it is.

Political scientists and foreign policy experts have used the term “deep state” for years to describe individuals and institutions who exercise power independent of – and sometimes over – civilian political leaders.

They applied it mainly to developing countries like Algeria, Pakistan, Egypt and Turkey – where generals and spies called the real shots in nominally democratic societies and replaced elected leaders when they saw fit.

(Turkey and Egypt have recently moved to move overt security-state dictatorships, in which the deep state is the only state.)

For a generation, the people who saw everything like an American deep state – even if they rarely called it that – resided on the left, not the right.

The 9/11 attacks triggered the rapid growth of an opaque security and intelligence machine often unaccountable to the civilian legal system. In the 2000s, the critique focused on a “war machine” of military and intelligence officials, defense contractors and neo-conservative ideologues who, in some versions, took orders directly from Vice President Dick Cheney.

In the Obama era, the focus shifted to the eerie precision of “targeted killings” by drones, and then the furor over Snowden (the ex-National Security Agency contractor whose 2013 leaks exposed the astonishing reach of the government’s surveillance.

“There’s definitely a deep state,” Snowden told the Nation [publication] in 2014. “Trust me, I’ve been there.”

Even measured academics began to describe a dual-state system in the United States, the focus of Tufts University international law professor Michael J. Glennon’s 2014 book, National Security and Double Government. Glennon observed that Obama had campaigned against Bush-era surveillance and security policies in 2008 but acquiesced to many of them as president – suggesting a national-security apparatus that holds sway even over the elected leaders notionally in charge of it.

Enter Donald Trump.

After January 2017, the unaccountable string-pulling bureaucracy suddenly came to seem, especially to liberals, less a sinister cabal than a crucial check on a president determined to blow up the system we had come to take for granted.

Trump was openly hostile to much of the government he now ran, and its institutions began fighting back – sometimes in public ways. They did so with a combination of the severe (leaks of Trumps conversations with foreign leaders) and the absurd (critical tweets from federal account like that of the National Park Service).

To Trump and his allies, the new president is now the victim of conspiratorial bureaucrats threatened by a president trying to “drain the swamp.”

In August, after Environmental Protection Agency employees alerted the New York Times to an ERA report on climate change they feared would be quashed, a headline at the conservative Breitbart News website shouted: “Deep State Teams with Fake News.”

Even more anxiety swirls around classified information: In July, the Republican-led Senate Homeland Security Committee released a report that found the Trump administration was being hit by national security leaks “on a nearly daily basis” and at a far higher rate than its predecessors encountered.

(After the report was picked up in the conservative media, Trump's son Donald Jr. tweeted a link to it. He wrote: "If there ever was confirmation that the Deep State is real, illegal & endangers national security, it's this.")

- Beneath the politics of convenience is the reality that a large segment of the U.S. government really does operate without much transparency or public scrutiny, and has abused its awesome powers in myriad ways.
- And sometimes the government bureaucracy really does exercise power over the commander in chief – Obama felt that the military pressured him into sending more troops to Afghanistan than he had wanted, while an inexperienced George W. Bush was arguably led to war by a bipartisan cadre of national security insiders who had long wanted to take out Saddam Hussein.

Even the Trump critique about the deep state in revolt, however exaggerated, is worth consideration.

Hillary Clinton voters might delight in the classified material gushing forth about the president's men – but its release can be criminal. (In May, Brennan called the intelligence leaks "appalling.")

Yes, the president could be covering up misdeeds of his own, raising thorny ends-and-means questions. But Trump haters should consider the precedent – and how they would feel if, say, a President Kamala Harris were to enter the White House in 2021 and be hobbled by a similar blizzard of leaks from intelligence officials who consider her soft on terrorism.

Whether any of this means there is a deep state in America depends on your definition.

- Powerful bureaucrats with access to government secrets and trusted media friends certainly do try to influence presidents from the shadows.

But in Washington, at least, their views and goals are not monolithic. And unlike their counterparts in the developing world, they do tend to execute the orders they're given by the president, however grudgingly – and are committed to upholding the rule of law.

[“Eye on the World” comment in 2024: While politicians and media members have resisted the rule of law throughout history, this period of time has an excessive amount of leaders ignoring the rule of law. One of the most outlandish examples at this time is how Joe Biden blatantly ignores the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States when he repeatedly forgives student loans. The United States is in trouble.]

An article by J.B. Shurk titled “The Government Is Not Your Daddy” was posted at americanthinker.com on March 17, 2024. Following are excerpts of the article.

It is no secret that many voters have “daddy” issues. They grew up in homes without strong, loving fathers and desperately seek from government what they never found in their youths – a protective authority figure and lifelong role model.

When people with “daddy” issues find their way into power, they force their own psychological deficiencies upon the broader populace. Why? Because they try to play “father” to their constituents, but have no idea how a good father is supposed to behave.

Citizens who love liberty do not confuse the government for their own parents.

- Government is (at best) a nuisance and (at worst) a thuggish bully. It does not exist to keep you safe at night, to food on the kitchen table, to teach you right from wrong, or to furnish you with love.
- Government is a bureaucratic machine that specializes in using the threat of force and the application of actual violence to coerce strangers into doing exactly what the State wishes them to do.
- This fraudulent parent-child construct produces nothing but servile citizenry.
- In a healthy family, parents nurture their children until they become competent, self-sufficient adults. Good parents supervise what their children learn, keep them from harm, and guide them along their journey to adulthood. The love and respect between a parent and child never go away – but the relationship is not meant to produce lifelong juveniles stuck in a permanent state of dependency. Children grow to become capable adults; those adults have children of their own; and the cycle promotes a strong, healthy society.
- When governments act as false parents, however, they are not interested in transforming juveniles into adults. They do not seek to create competent citizens who are capable of taking care of themselves. They do not want to produce a population strong enough to think for themselves. Because a citizen’s self-sufficiency eliminates his dependency on government, bureaucrats must infantilize grown adults for the rest of their lives.
- The State is not equipped to be a parent, but it is an ideal machine for mass-producing slaves.

Parents sometimes have to “pretend” around their young children. To keep them safe from the terrors of an often dark world, they “bend the truth” here and there. When a family faces a crisis, parents will look into their children’s eyes and say: “Everything will be all right.” That’s what good parents do when the best that they can do for their children is to soothe their worries with fearless love and steady support.

Adults, on the other hand, should be able to speak bluntly to each other without concern that an unvarnished truth will “trigger” another adult to melt into a trembling, catatonic puddle of tears.

Time and again, the pundit class has insisted on treating American adults as if they were children too young to understand harsh realities.

Pretending if for young children. Facing hard truths head-on is for adults. Childish Americans must grow up, because the government can never be their “daddy.”

An article by D. Parker titled “Do Rank-and-File Leftists Realize They’re Being Scammed by Their Ruling Class?” was posted at americanthinker.com on March 14, 2024. Following are excerpts of the article.

The dirty little secret about the wealth distribution of the leftist ruling class is that they only redistribute the wealth – to themselves.

Look at the evidence down through history and around the world and you will see the same pattern repeated with every leftist regime.

Let’s begin with the now-defunct USSR – which was supposed to be a utopian “worker’s paradise.” The result was crammed apartment blocks and queues for bread and toilet paper – while the “select few” of the nomenklatura lived in luxury. It’s been reported that Mikhail Gorbachev (the last USSR leader) had a net worth of $5 million.

Then there is the leftist leader (Adolph Hitler) about whom the national socialist media can’t talking – whose final objective of a “Classless German Society” was undermined when it was revealed he “Loved Money and Died Rich.”

Speaking of dictators adored by leftists, let’s not forget the far-left’s idol Fidel Castro – who made the usual promises and had a net worth of $900 million.

Then there’s the leftist regime of North Korea – where the common people starved and Kim Jong Il Lived up and amassed $4 billion. His son (Kim Jong Un) took over as supreme leader in 2011 and was reported to be worth $5 billion a few years ago – with one report having $1 trillion in assets these days.

Don’t forget that according to leftist doctrine, the government under the ever-perfect utopia of communism is supposed to “wither away” after a few years.

Such as in communist Red China – home of the Tiananmen Square massacre and the regime oppressive to Hong Kong. It is reported that “600 million Chinese are still living on about $5 a day.” Forbes reports that China’s “rich lists” are saturated with Communist Party members and a “record number” of billionaires. What would Marx and Mao say about that?

So much for the withering away.

Back in the states, we have socialist politicians and their unwavering dedication to social justice and the redistribution of wealth to their bank accounts.

How is it that even leftists of modest means become enriched by “serving” as our ever-faithful rulers in the controller class, dictating how we are to run our lives?

(Before leftists respond with the irrelevant factoid that many on the pro-freedom right are rich, we would not that we don’t call for wealth redistribution – so the far-left bears the burden of the hypocrisy alone. It’s one thing to achieve and become wealthy out of merit. It’s quite another to then call for the destruction of others. That is the big difference that distinguishes the two sides.)

Ruling class leftists become exceedingly wealthy because they exploit their positions of governmental control to enrich themselves.

The Democrats were previously the party of the blue-collar workers and the middle class – the proletariat in the parlance of Marx. Now, the socialist national agenda is destroying the middle class and enriching its upper crust. They are actively working to wreck the middle class in the following ways.

- With downward wage pressure via the illegal invasion over the open border
- Endangering everyone who can’t afford private security to deal with criminals arriving
- Eviscerating savings with inflation from the ruling class printing money to buy votes

Ruling class leftists are a fraud. Sure, they want to control and run our lives – but it’s worse than that. Their actions are based on cynical false premises. They feign concern.

- They feign concern about guns, but that’s primarily because they don’t want anyone to have the ability to resist them – they’re perfectly happy with guns around them when needed for their protection.
- They feign concern about global cooling, global warming, climate change or other buzzwords – but they still fly their jets around
- The elite supposed want to redistribute the wealth – yet they are primarily taking it for themselves.

How do we convince the rank-and-file leftists of these facts? How do we help citizens to realize that virtue signals are based on false pretenses and the promised wealth redistribution is not going to happen?

Isaiah 55:6-11–“Seek you the Lord while He may be found, call upon Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; let him return to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. ‘For My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor are your ways My ways,’ says the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain comes down, and the snow from heaven, and do not return there, but water the earth, and make it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so shall My word by that goes forth from My mouth; it shall not return to Me void, but it shall accomplish what I please, and it shall prosper in the thing for which I sent it.”
